of the pilots, the senior pilot on the crew, Dale Schrader. Dale Schrader told me a heart-grIPPING story that I think it would do well for Reader's Digest to print for 14 million Americans to read. He was saved by a good Somali who yelled in the dead of night after he and his copilot, who was badly burned on his face, who was badly hurt, his face crushed on the control stick when they made a hard landing. The back of the helicopter was an inferno, it burned the backs of their necks even though they had Velcro flight suits with the collar up in the back. It burned the back of Dale's left arm—the pilot sits on the right side in a helicopter—and as the aircraft commander, his pilot, there were third degree burns on the back side of his right arm because he is sitting in the left seat. He said it was an inferno of such intense fire that he never conceived anything that hot in his whole life. He had lost the three crewmen. He got the badly injured copilot out of the left side, went about 30 feet down, had his copilot in the alley. He came back to the airplane and the ammunition started to cook off. Chief Warrant Officer Schrader said that the fire was so intense—he knew his three crewmen were lost—one of them an intelligence sergeant flying his first mission over Mogadishu. He was from the 10th aviation regiment with the 10th Mountain Division. The other two crewmen, we never did get any remains, and the Army satisfied me that they did everything they could to try. They were from the 101st aviation regiment with the great 101st Airborne Division that I watched operating Friday at Fort Campbell, KY.

Schrader said they went down this alley, he fired a full clip out of his 9-millimeter, got his extra clip out and fired that all in one burst, hit somebody, saw him drop in the night and crawl away. Then another man comes running down the street, fires an AK-47 at him. Then they throw grenades at them. His copilot drops his 9-millimeter Beretta and his extra clip in the dark which they cannot find. And then he hears these beautiful words, "American boys, American boys." Madam Speaker, there are Somalis who know we saved hundreds of thousands of their women and children from starving to death.

He looked around the corner of the stairwell where he was hiding—and I have a photograph here, if I can find that. I should have that, a picture of that alleyway. I saw that stairwell in one of my photographs taken from the air 3 weeks later. He looked out and the man had a flashlight and said to himself, "Well, he is not going to hunt me down and kill me with a flashlight." He came out and he said, "American boys, come," took them back through a United Nations armored personnel carrier, probably vintage because they buy with Euro oil dollars, probably a new British or German piece of equipment. Now, where was that equipment on the night of September 25, just 8 days later, when our guys were hunkered down in a massive automatic weapons firefight on Sunday the 3d and all morning long in the darkness and early morning hours of the 4th?

So Halperin and every civilian at the Pentagon had 8 days to consider the requests for armor and armored fighting vehicles before we launched another operation.

So here, September 25, the same date that Dale Schrader went through that nightmare story, he is in the burn center with his other pilot. Let me see if I can think of his name here, Dwight—no, Perry, P-e-r-r-y, Allman. These two great warrant officers from the 101st Airborne Division, they are still in the burn center down at Brooks Army Hospital. I hope they have got cable TV. They would not mind hearing their story going out to over 1½ million Americans across the country. I just upped that, Madam Speaker, another 200,000 people.

So here they are in the Human Events article, September 25 of this year, "Jane Fonda Next?" Little did the Human Events author know that Jane Fonda was at that very moment already appointed by Clinton to go up to the United Nations and attack by name the Holy Roman Catholic Church as an offense to the world. She and Ted Turner have made it a cause, I guess. She attacks the largest Christian denomination in the world in front of the United Nations Assembly, and she was appointed to that post by Bill Clinton. They have not discovered that yet over at Human Events.

It says, "Jane Fonda Next?" It goes on. "Senate may soon approve alarming Halperin appointment." The story begins, "Short of treason, what does it take to disqualify someone from securing a key position in the Clinton Administration's Defense Department? Nothing, apparently. So 'Civil Libertarian' Morton Halperin, who collaborated closely with some of America's most vociferous enemies during the cold war, may yet become assistant secretary of defense for democracy and peacekeeping. A surmise that his is going to make it conjures up a passionate Patrick Henry in the House of Burgers, the oldest legislature in America, saying, "God almighty forbid it."

Should Halperin be confirmed, he would have enormous sway over U.S. defense policy. Now, that was a prophetic statement, 8 days before the killing of 18 of our Rangers and special forces, special trained operations guys. And the death 3 days later of one of the senior guys, Sgt. Matt Greerson at the airport where 12 others were cut up by a mortar direct hit.

"Should he be confirmed, Halperin will have enormous sway over U.S. defense policy, including, it seems, sharing responsibility for putting American troops under United Nations command. He will also have access to our most precious military secrets, the very kind of secrets he ferociously sought to divulge to the world when the Soviets were threatening us with nuclear annihilation." The idea that this former, highly influential ACLU figure may actually be confirmed to such a powerful position within the Pentagon has positively alarmed influential members of the national security community and this Member of the great United States House of Representatives.

Needless to say, he may very well end up getting the job. No Clinton appointee, it should be noted, has yet been defeated in a vote by the Senate, where the Armed Services Committee, chaired by SAM NUNN of Georgia is supposedly to take up the nomination shortly"—notice this dragged on for 6 weeks. They still have not figured out how to get their act together. "So far not a single Democrat has had a bad word to say about Halperin, not one." Well, behind the scenes a couple of veterans on the majority side of the House, Madam Speaker, have made their point known to the administration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Ms. SLAUGHTER). The Chair would remind the speaker that he should not be admonishing the confirmation processes of the other body.

Mr. DORNAN. Yes. Let me see, did I admonish that process or did I say—yes, that is right, I was saying that it has taken 6 weeks to go on. That is not an admonishment of the Senate, I am well advised, Madam Speaker. I was admonishing the administration for delaying putting him up for confirmation for such a highly sensitive Defense Department position. But I will not criticize the Senate process.

I was referring not to the Democrat Senators but to the Democrats outside the Congress of the United States.

The Republicans on the panel—I am weighing my words as I read this now—the Republicans on the panel, and this does refer to the Senate, are virtually united against him. Well, that is just a fact.

WILLIAM COHEN of Maine, who also served with distinguished service in this chamber, is still riding the fence, but no one has yet become the point man in opposition. I think since this was written, the Vietnam war attack pilot and hero JOHN MCCAIN, hero, POW also for over 6 years, I think he has become the point man. But then so is TRENT LOTT and so is BOB SMITH. They ask a question: Where is the Senate Majority Leader ROBERT DOLE, who served with distinction in the 10th Mountain Division in Italy and gave about as much pain and service in a hospital bed over 3½ years as any Member has ever given who served in either body for 218 years? Where is DOLE in all this? I believe BOB DOLE is weighing in, Madam Speaker.

Then they go on to criticize him a little. But this is again a September 25 article. It says, "Meanwhile, a curious alliance of the far left, the once-Stalinoid magazine Nation, for example, and a few ultra-liberal 'defense experts,'" and it mentions Alton Frye, Arnold Kantor, and Jerry Stone, a clutch of neo-conservatives at the New Republic, and even a conservative writer for the Wall Street Journal has begun to rally round Halperin.

That writer in the Wall Street Journal took my breath away when I read his article. This is the great writer who is doing such a journeyman work on NAFTA to make sure it goes through, Paul Gigot. I could not believe he was willing to dismiss all of Halperin's past to see this man sit in this newly created defense position of peacekeeping and democracy.

My friend, the gentleman from California [Mr. DREIER] has inquired if I am going to use my full special order, and since I am using this great chart, Madam Speaker, as the backing for my tragic photograph of Indian armor that was not available to save lives in the so-called peacekeeping, I would say that I am now going to move into the veterans phase, and as the son of a Marine drill instructor, I know the gentleman from California [Mr. DREIER], I know the gentleman will not mind if I take about 20 more minutes.

Madam Speaker, I received what we call around here a "Dear Colleague" letter from one of my friends in the majority who is known around her as Mr. National Guard, Mr. National Reserve, the great gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. MONTGOMERY], chairman of the Committee on Veterans' Affairs. He and his staff under his inspirational direction put together a beautiful Dear Colleague letter to inform all of us in the House about what is going to happen tomorrow right near the veterans' memorial. It is not the permanent place for an absolutely awe-inspiring memorial to American women who served in combat. It will symbolize those who have served in all of our wars, from Molly Pitcher to the courageous Army nurses who served under incredible fire in the Malinta Tunnel in Corregidor right up to its fall, those Army nurses that I visited with on many trips to Vietnam as a journalist, playing volleyball with them.

I remember I was outside this MASH hospital with their little puppy dogs running around, and all of a sudden the alarm goes off. Here come a helicopter, without any of the dark humor of the kind of phony show, MASH. This was the real military triage in combat theater hospitals.

I watched these nurses go out to these helicopters and bring in these badly-wounded Americans and those courageous dust off helicopter crews that were actual aerial ambulances, bringing these men in.

I remember one Army Lieutenant nurse, could not have been more than just in her very early twenties, crying to a friend of mine, Gary Crosby who was with me, that one of the saddest things was how much work it took—this was actually in a hospital down in Kontum near Pleiku.

As a matter of fact, it was the very day that I put on this Montagnard bracelet that was the inspiration for the POW bracelet. I have not had it off my wrist in, good grief, 25 years and 2 months.

But that very day I put this on in a small Montagnard village, this nurse told us, and in the big hospital there they would have to explain to some of our soldiers who in bed with several limbs amputated why they, the nurses, were spending so much time with North Vietnamese prisoners-of-war patients.

She said,

You see, the problem is we think because this is Vietnam that the boys fighting under communism from North Vietnam have an immunity to malaria, but a boy from the Red River Valley in North Vietnam has no more immunity to some of the diseases down here in South Vietnam than does a young man from Detroit or Long Island.

Also she said,

They all have such poor diets, they all have stomach worms, so when they get a body shot their wounds are immediately horribly infected and they all are jaundiced with malaria.

So she said,

We have to spend even more hours to save the lives of the enemy prisoners that were trying to kill our men than sometimes we spend with our own men.

And I thought, what guardian angels of mercy to save the lives of the young North Vietnamese soldiers, sent by evil communism out of Hanoi to die by the millions, literally, against our young men in a war horribly manipulated by politicians, not a one of whom really had a son or a daughter there, who was calling the shots through people who thought, like the aforementioned Morton Halperin, dragging on a war after LBJ, Lyndon Johnson, had promised to have us out, and the old joke goes, people said, If I voted for Goldwater, the war would continue in Vietnam. I did, and it did, except it was under President Johnson, never knew how to go for victory, surrounded by McNamara type people, another person who has written a column with Eliot Richardson endorsing wholeheartedly Morton Halperin, without offering one defense for this man's checkered career, without ever alluding to Halperin's defense of this slim Benedict Arnold, Phillip Agee.

So the thoughts of these women serving our country now at that time, it was probably one, two or three percent, now it is up over 11 percent, 14 percent in the gulf. The nurses that are saving lives in Somalia, many young officer nurses in the 46th Field Hospital there in the U.S. compound saved the lives of many of these Rangers who were brought in torn up at the beginning of last month.

So I want to read SONNY MONTGOMERY's beautiful "Dear Colleague" letter of this week dedicated to our ladies in uniform.

He puts an excerpt at the top from "Nurse", a wonderful book by Diane Carlson Evans. She says:

Please don't forget me. I've been through war's hell and if only you would listen, I've a story.

SONNY titled his "Dear Colleague" letter, "To Serve Her Country."

The hospital at Cam Ranh Bay—and it is a big hospital, I have been there—

TO SERVE HER COUNTRY

The hospital at Cam Ranh Bay was a long way from Clayton, New Mexico, and events there in 1969 would forever change the life of 23-year-old Dotty Beatty. Assigned to the facility's intensive care unit, the Air Force second lieutenant, like others who served in Vietnam, experienced daily the extremes of war and human behavior. She carries the memories still.

"The Sound of a chopper still raises my anxiety level. I wonder how many, how injured? I think the only people who hear a chopper before I do are the corpsmen and combat vets. For them it was the sound of relief—help for their friends. For me, it was a sound of dread—could I do enough?"

The Vietnam Beatty remembers was "a world with almost no rules, a different value system, different priorities. I find myself making decisions today based on the priorities of that setting."

New young hero—

Mary Foley was on a weekend pass at her parents Haverhill, Massachusetts home in February 1942 when she was abruptly ordered back to Fort Devens,— which closes next year, by the way.

The 24-year-old Army nurse soon found herself on the U.S.S. Uruguay, bound first for Australia and, ultimately, New Guinea. The initial destination had been the Philippines, but Bataan and the nurses stationed there were under siege and about to fall to the enemy. Foley would not be home again for three and one-half years.

"It was quite an experience for a shy girl from New England," says Mary Foley of the generally intolerable conditions of the island—the jungle, the heat, lack of water and basic medical supplies. Assigned to the tropical disease unit of the 10th Evacuation Hospital, Foley came to dread the toll of the local mission bell.

"The bell was our signal to report to the hospital and to the incoming soldiers sick with typhoid and malaria," remembers Foley. "Considering the climate and the conditions, we took care of them as best we could and gave them as much comfort as possible. Without the nurses, the casualties would have been much worse. We were their lifeline."

Mary Foley continued to be a lifeline for sick and wounded soldiers upon her return to the United States. She worked at Walter Reed Army Medical Center in Washington, D.C. until 1953.

Representing different generations,—

SONNY MONTGOMERY writes—

Mary Foley and Dotty Beatty are linked by a profound sense of duty and love of country. As witnesses, often from the front row, and full participants in the struggles which have taken our nation from Lexington to Mogadishu, women have been premier contributors to the cause of freedom and political stability worldwide. From desk to field, from ship's deck to cockpit, from triage to battlefield, women have endured the horrors, stress, fatigue and other inevitable results of war. Women can proudly claim more than an ancillary role in U.S. defense.

And now at long last the time of national recognition has come. Tomorrow, on Veterans Day, November 11, 1993, a memorial in honor of women like Dottie Beatty will be at 2 o'clock near the Veterans Memorial. There were more than 11,000 women who served in Vietnam. It will be dedicated on the two and a half acre site of the Vietnam Veteran Memorial in Washington. It will be the first memorial in the Nation's Capital to specifically honor women's military service. Behind this poignant tribute, a statue depicting three Vietnam era women, one of whom is caring for a badly wounded soldier, is an equally poignant message. Had it not been for our women who served in Vietnam, 90 percent of whom were nurses, there is no doubt there would be more names of young heroes appearing on the polished granite panels of the wall which lists the war's fallen.

I have four more little paragraphs here.

Of the dedication Beatty says:

There will be women who are confronting for the first time the fact that they were in Nam, and there will be men who were injured who will be looking for their nurse. It will be a powerful time for healing.

Recognition and healing on a national scale will continue when the Women in Military Service for America Memorial is dedicated in 1996, and the gentlewoman from Maryland [Mrs. BENTLEY] and I worked to make this happen. This memorial, which will include a visitor center, will be placed at the main gate of Arlington National Cemetery.

So, tomorrow, to kick off these next 3 years, the memorial that we all see tomorrow at 2 o'clock will be moved across the river, closer to the Pentagon, at the main entrance to the long, beautiful drive that has many beautiful statues on each side to our airborne guys, to the merchant marine forces. They are beautiful statues all the way down that long drive, but the entire end area right at the foot of the hill that goes up to the grave of President John F. Kennedy, that used to be just like an empty grotto is going to be completely beautified and dominated by this statue of these three combat nurses and the wounded American soldier across the lap of one of them. That is where it will rest for as long as this country survives. It will recognize the dedication and valor of 1,800,000 women in uniform who have responded to aggression, despotism, and humanitarian challenges and threats to America's security, and they are in Mogadishu as we speak tonight.

These two memorials are much more than mere symbols of atonement for the societal slight of the contributions of women in our Armed Forces. They will be tangible, lasting reminders of the selflessness of an extraordinary society. Women veterans, they have achieved a place of great distinction in our history and, of course, in our hearts.

Of our total veteran population living of 27 million there are surviving, as veterans, 1.2 million women who, every one of them, was a volunteer for service. They, too, served under difficult and hazardous circumstances as not just nurses, which I mentioned at great length, but as saboteurs, as scouts, as couriers, as switchboard operators, as stenographers, as skilled translators, as pilots. Who will ever forget Jackie Cochran, the great corps of Wasp pilots flying the hottest fighter aircraft that American Army pilots had delivered to them by these great ladies? A number have been highly decorated, including combat related rewards. Some were prisoners of war, the aforementioned nurses captured at Bataan and Corregidor. A submarine managed to get a great number out, but the older ones, the senior ones, the more experienced ones, the old-timers who were in their mid-twenties, many of them stayed behind and continued nursing in the dreaded camps of Cabanatuan and San Tomas. Some remain buried in our U.S. cemeteries overseas. All have been important to both wartime and peacetime efforts.

The fact is that we owe a great debt to our women veterans for their achievements, a debt that goes beyond granite or bronze commendations, important as they are.

So, on November 11, tomorrow, Veterans Day, a day that my dad celebrated in 1918 in the trenches of France where he had just won his third wound chevron, what we now call a Purple Heart, on the 11th hour of the 11th day of the 11th month of 1918. It was quite a thrill for over a million young Americans who were in our first international conflict in the name of liberating other people and freeing part of another country, France, and then some of them, and their sons at their side, did it all over again. Remember there are 22 sets of brothers in the battlefield memorials of Normandy; the 50th anniversary coming up this June 6. One father and one son, and that father had fought in France before and lies right next to his son in those beautiful fields of our Normandy cemetery.

So tomorrow, on this great American memorial day, take a moment to contemplate the contributions. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. MONTGOMERY] says of Dottie Beatty, Mary Foley and the hundreds of thousands of women who have served in our Armed Forces, "In the chronicles of patriotism and freedom there is a story that captures the spirit, the courage and the inspiration that is America," and I would add that very essence of what makes us the land of the free and the home of the brave.

I gladly yield to the gentlewoman from Maryland [Mrs. BENTLEY], my distinguished colleague, who has yet to achieve even greater heights of glory serving her country.

Madam HELEN BENTLEY.

Mrs. BENTLEY. Madam Speaker, I want to thank the gentleman from California [Mr. DORNAN]. I thank the gentleman from California for yielding his time, and I want to say he has provided much insight into the situation in Somalia. I am also very please that he discussed the role of women in combat and the role that the women have played throughout our history of the world wars of Vietnam, Korea, et cetera.

I was in Vietnam for several months, I say to the gentleman, and I saw firsthand what the women did over there and what an important role they played, and I am so delighted that the gentleman mentioned that tomorrow the memorial is going to be dedicated.

I want to again thank the gentleman from California for all that he is doing to keep alive for the people of America all of the activities that our veterans have performed and continue to perform, and again I thank him for his insight on Somalia.

Mr. DORNAN. I say to the gentlewoman, "Thank you, Mrs. BENTLEY, and thank you for those friendly and kind words."

I would like to put in the RECORD, Madam Speaker, an article from U.S. News and World Report back in September called "A Trip Back to D-Day". Veterans will hit the Normandy beaches next June in search of memories, and our great colleague, the gentleman from Florida [Mr. GIBBONS] who bailed out in the middle of the night of June 6, our great reporter of official debate, Chris Heil, who sits here many hours day in and day out like our good folks that are on the floor now, Chris hit the beach at about the same time SAM GIBBONS, great Congressman from Florida, was bailing out behind the lines. Chris, and I am sure SAM, would agree, as tough as SAM's job was, and I think one of the greatest photographs of World War II, and I saw it again in the dining room at one of the dining rooms of Fort Campbell, KY, great airborne base, 101st Airborne. Here is General Eisenhower talking to these 101st Airborne troopers with their mohawk haircuts, their American flag sewn to their right shoulder.

So that those that bailed out, unfortunately, maybe it was 82d Airborne guys, over the little village of Sainte-Mère-Eglise and got hung up in the trees and were machine gunned to death by a German unit that we did not know was in that area. Those men actually were the first Americans to fly Old Glory over occupied Europe—although the flags they were flying were sewn to the field jackets of their dead bodies.

I remember using that example against the flag burners of America, Morton Halperin, out there lobbying against me, that how could anybody who had ever visited Sainte-Mère-Eglise and seen where Sgt. John Young hung from the spire of a small little Catholic church, playing dead because the Germans machine gunned him and only knocked the heel off his boot, but all the other men, he could look down and see them hanging dead in these small, beautiful, pruned trees in that little idyllic village. How could anybody who had ever seen a picture of those bodies there, if you never read the factual stories of that, at least remember the great Zanuck film, The Longest Day, where John Wayne played one of our commanders, I forget whether he was Maxwell Taylor or John Gavin or one of the regimental commanders. But he looked at all these troopers hanging dead from those trees with those American flags sewn to their combat jackets, and I can still hear John Wayne's voice saying, "Cut 'em down."

Well, let us put this article in the RECORD, Madam Speaker.

Here is another one on McNamara's ghost, from the Baltimore Sun. I think it is germane to some of the battles that we are having now. I would like to put this into the RECORD, when it talks about McNamara's band, the systems analysis people that quickly became known by that title throughout the Pentagon, they sought to quantify everything.

You know, the worst thing Robert "Strange" McNamara ever said was that our college kids were the future of our country. He is talking about Bill Clinton types. Therefore, they should be exempted from the draft.

What he was forgetting was that every single Air Force, Marine, and Navy officer that he was sending to their deaths off the aircraft carriers and from the air bases of Vietnam, big F-4 Phantoms, F-105 Thunder Chiefs, going against footbridges, losing these men, they were college graduates. They were, almost every one of them, married. They left beautiful heroic wives behind and beautiful little children that I meet today, grown up young men in their twenties and thirties, who talk about their heroic dads that flew against communism in Indochina and that rightfully have a piece of that Berlin Wall that came down 4 years ago yesterday.

Let me also put in the RECORD, Madam Speaker, the 75th anniversary coming up tomorrow of World War I, my dad, Harry Joseph Dornan's war, a combat artillery man. He came close to dying more than once. One time he was on a train that went off the track and rolled down the hillside. It had a hot stove, and the stove was rolling around inside, killing men, burning men. And when the car came to a rest at the bottom of the hill, my dad was on the bottom of the pile drenched in blood. He said he laid there thinking, where is the pain going to come from first? And then as he felt his body, he realized that he was totally uninjured and that he was drenched in the blood of the young enlisted men in his command.

Tomorrow is the 50th anniversary of the Pacific Bougainville campaign of World War II, and also the Italian campaign. I will put this in the RECORD.

Madam Speaker, let me close by stating that I will put two other articles in on this Veterans Day. One is called "Let's Remember What Veterans Did in the War," again from the Army Times, and a final one by Robert C. McFarland, Marine lieutenant colonel, served the Reagan administration well. His title is "Consider What Star Wars Accomplished." That is something to contemplate on this Veterans Day tomorrow, that Ronald Reagan won the cold war without ever firing a shot. Margaret Thatcher gave him that great credit in history.

Madam Speaker, the documents, articles, and other matters I referred to in my special order tonight follow:

CURRENT DEFENSE POLICY, INVITATION TO DISASTER?

(By Congressman Pat Roberts)

First, let me say how much I appreciate your invitation. Special thanks to Jim McVey and to Sergeant Schuler. Simply put, it is both an honor and a privilege to be with you as we celebrate the 218th birthday of our proud Corps. Semper Fidelis.

As a matter of fact, we just had similar ceremonies in our Nation's capital with the Commandant, General Monday, with 19 members of Congress who bear the title of U.S. Marine collectively serving 224 years.

One of my marching orders in getting ready for this particular mission was to provide a title for my remarks. I was reading some additional commentary about what we did or didn't do in Somalia, what we are doing or not doing in Haiti and Bosnia and my blood pressure went back up to its normal Washington boiling point.

I thought about "The Modern Marine Corps in the Current Clinton Minefield." My staff said that was a bit harsh. So we changed it. I will now visit with you about, "Current Defense Policy, An Invitation to Disaster." There must be a subtle difference there somewhere.

Well, defense policy in just a moment. First, this word about the "Old Corps." All former Marines, especially those of my vintage, are entitled to tell it like it was in the "Old Corps." After all, the reliving and exaggeration of what actually happened is the stuff we would like to think we are made of.

Its been a long time but I cannot help but remember the first birthday ball I attended—some 33 years ago—Third Marine Division—Okinawa—Kadena Air Force Base. One 2nd Lt. Roberts was suddenly in charge of the cake detail. I was collared from the ranks when the original officer in charge celebrated like we were in Tun Tavern and could not perform the mission.

A Marine hallmark is to be flexible. We were flexible. The command to yours truly from the Chief of Staff Stallings—a man we affectionately called Stud Stallings—was:

"Roberts, roll that damn cake back to where the x is on the floor and when I say the word, hand me the sword and get the hell out of the way."

Which I did and the 184th birthday was safe and secure.

Then there was the 213th celebration at the Sheraton Park Hotel in Washington where yours truly was asked by Lt. Gen. Etnyre to address all of the Marines stationed at Headquarters Marine Corps.

I want you to know I made my fellow Marines proud, some 2,000 in the seats and rafters, with remarks that doubtlessly live in their hearts and minds. Except of course, when I turned the wrong way on a dance floor slicker than the one in old Cow Town in Dodge City. I ran smack into the General. He survived this sudden frontal assault, adjusted his cover and we made the best of it.

This evening I believe all cakes and generals are safe. I am not too sure about anything else.

When we honor and celebrate the Marine Corps birthday, we do so with a sense of pride in the glory, history and honor that we pass from one generation to another in General Lejune's time honored message. We extol the virtues of courage, intelligence, integrity and leadership. That is how it should be. But, what makes up the soul, if you will, of our Corps is not only the chapters of our proud history but your contributions, your thoughts, your feelings, your experiences, your snapshots in your own Marine Corps album.

If you please, some personal snapshots out of my Marine Corps Album:

The first is that of my father, Major Wes Roberts, who at 42, ignored the age restrictions, and joined the Corps in the midst of World War II and saw action in Iwo Jima and Okinawa. Fifteen years later, his son stood atop Mt. Suribachi with former members of the 27th Marines, thankful they were still alive and shedding proud tears for those who were not. That was an experience I shall never forget.

A second snapshot: General Victor J. Krulak ordering the Publications Branch of the Education Center at Marine Corps Schools, Quantico, VA: "You will publish a guerilla warfare manual in 90 days." It was in the first year of the Kennedy Administration and Defense Secretary MacNamara was enamored with so called "brush-fire" engagements and the newly created Army Special Forces. We Marines were playing catch up. Heading up our group was then Colonel, now retired General Oscar F. Peatross, the hero of the Makin Island Raid, then colonel, now retired General Ed Simmons, one of our most renown authors and historians, and one six-foot, four-inch, 250 pound colonel, now retired Commandant, Bob Barrows, veteran of the HUK guerilla action in the Philippines.

I especially remember Bob Barrows. When we had to get out from behind our desks and take the new PT test, Lt. Roberts had to lug 250 pounds of Col. Barrows in a firearm's carry for 100 yards under simulated fire. I actually carried the future Commandant!

I reminded him of that when, as a Member of Congress, he had us over for breakfast. His response was, "Roberts, I don't remember you carrying me but I sure as hell remember carrying you and I was over 40 years old."

Well, I don't know who carried whom but the point is we relied on each other with a special bond because we understood who and what we were and what our mission was as United States Marines. To that mission we are truly always faithful. Semper Fidelis.

It's that "always faithful" business that I want to talk about for faith is indeed a two-way street. When I graduated from Kansas State University, home of the fighting Wildcats, the draft board of Jackson County just north of here, thought it only fitting that I be put at the head of the selective service line. Plain language, I was drafted. Now, I figured a college graduate like me had more to offer than spending two years in the Army—with all due respect to my Army buddies and relatives.

I asked for a delay and spent a month going from recruiter to recruiter saying in effect what can the Army, Navy, Air Force, do for me. Until I got to the Marine Recruiter—a Major mad at the world sitting behind a desk with a huge red sty in his eye. When I asked what the Marine Corps could do for me, he responded by saying:

"Get your damn hand off my desk. What the hell do you think you can do for my Marine Corps? You'll be lucky to get a dry fox-hole if you survive boot-camp which I doubt."

Then he said this:

"Young man, if you join the Corps, you will become part of the greatest fighting force in the history of the world and if you get in trouble, if you are pinned down, we'll send the squad, platoon, company, regiment, division and if necessary the whole damn Marine Corps * * * and son, no one has ever stopped the Marine Corps yet."

Well, even a small town kid from Holton, Kansas could recognize a gun-ho recruiting pitch. But, that pitch was wrapped with elements of commitment and purpose that are basic and fundamental.

That brings me to the basic point of my remarks. I am extremely concerned that basic commitment is missing as we try to meet the challenges of the first obligation of the Federal Government—to provide for our national defense.

In this regard, those who cannot remember the past are condemned to repeat it.

Almost 20 years ago, my predecessor, Congressman Keith Sebelius, a veteran of World War II and Korea said:

"There must never be another Vietnam. Our nation's 15-year effort in Southeast Asia should not be a matter of blame but a tragic lesson to be learned. We must not waste American lives and resources in political wars of gradualism in the future."

Keith went on to say, "Escalation in a war where we have ruled out military victory does not make sense." When you think about that statement one wonders why on earth it was even necessary!

Those in charge of current foreign and defense policy—and that certainly includes the Commander-in-Chief—and all of us in the Congress would do well to listen to the advice of former U.S. Senator Richard Russell, the Georgia Democrat who was Chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee during the Vietnam War.

"As for me, my fellow Americans, I shall never knowingly support a policy of sending even a single American serviceman overseas to risk his life in combat unless the entire civilian population and wealth of our country—all that we have all that we are—is to bear a commensurate responsibility in giving him the fullest support and protection of which we are capable."

Those classic words reflect the commitment the plain language recruiting pitch that Marine major gave me.

Senator Russell went on to say, "It is confession of moral weakness on the part of this country not to take any steps that are necessary to diminish the fighting power of our enemies. We hear a great deal about limited wars, but I would point out that there is no such thing as a limit on the actual combat in which men are engaged. While it may be a sound policy to have limited objectives, we should not expose our men to unnecessary hazards to life and limb in pursuing them."

Now some in our government continue to remind us the Cold War is over and now we face new challenges and that things have changed given the New World Order, or to be more accurate, New World Disorder. In some respects that is true but let me emphasize the rules of military engagement, and the value of each American life have not changed one whit!

Now, in the past 40 some years, we fought two, no-win wars with limited objectives and unlimited combat, casualties and loss of life * * *. Korea and Vietnam. In both, military commanders received their instructions from civilians in government and we, indeed, escalated our involvement in wars where military victory was ruled out.

Can it happen again?

Since 1986 there has been a defense build down, NOT build up. Defense budget authority has declined 27% in real terms. If the Bush defense plan been implemented, the decline would have been 32% over the next four years. Under President Clinton's budget, that decline is closer to 45%. Under either Bush or Clinton, the defense budget as a percentage of Gross Domestic Product will be at the lowest levels since the end of World War II.

During the past four years, the Base Closure Commission recommended the closure or realignment of 172 domestic bases. More are coming. Since 1990, U.S. military strength in Europe has been cut 50% and will continue to drop * * * unless, of course, President Clinton sends troops to Bosnia.

Candidate Clinton promised to cut defense another $60 billion more than President Bush. President Clinton is cutting the defense budget $127 billion with force levels at pre-Korea levels.

These numbers and this policy might make sense if the world was not such a dangerous place. Yet, the President's own policy objectives call on U.S. military forces to serve around the world and here at home in an expanding number of missions that invite military engagement. The Cold War may be over but history is not and the Cold War freeze is thawing with a vengeance.

Can it happen again?

Prior to Vietnam, the talk of the day was that we would no longer rely on strategic deterrence, that the national interest was in so called "brush-fire" wars, guerrilla actions, and the pacification of emerging nations. Sound somewhat familiar? Then it was Laos, Cambodia and Vietnam. Today it is Bosnia, Somalia and Haiti.

Did you know that the UN is currently involved in 18 peace keeping operations with eight more being proposed and that some 50,000 American troops are directly or indirectly involved? Are the American people aware of the extent of this involvement?

Did you know that in the last two months our UN Ambassador voted to approve our involvement in another three missions—Haiti, Liberia, and Rwanda—all without notifying or consulting with the Congress and paying about 32% of these UN operations without hearings or direct appropriations?

Did you know that before the infamous briefing on Somalia by Defense Secretary Aspin there was a congressional briefing last spring when we were told the President was, in fact, sending 60,000 troops into the Civil War in Bosnia? Remember this is the terrain where Tito and his guerrillas held off the Russians for the entirety of World War II. Thank goodness our allies said no.

Did you know that when Defense Secretary Aspin and Secretary of State Christopher briefed the Congress on Somalia—this was before we knew the Secretary refused the request for supporting armor—there were more questions than answers? I am quoting now from Secretary Aspin at that briefing:

"This has been a sobering experience and we are trying to sort through it. Our plan is now working well. We need a better plan. We need a time table. What do you think?"

Now that question was asked of some 250 members of Congress who expected at least some declaration of policy and contingency plans. The Congress cannot do that. Collectively, we cannot even decide when to adjourn, let alone conduct foreign policy and military operations.

Did you know that when our Rangers came under increased attack there was armor a relatively short distance away—Russian tanks, if you will, under Indian command. To get clearance to come to rescue of the Rangers, the Indian command would have had to obtain clearance from the UN command. The UN command was in New York where 30 employees out of 14,000 were manning a command and control office from nine to five!

A most important part of our nation's foreign policy obviously relies on our intelligence capability. Part of the mistake made in Southeast Asia were a result of faulty intelligence.

Can it happen again?

The effort to track down Aidid and to estimate his troop strength and the situation that led to casualties and loss of life that should never have happened resulted from weak human intelligence, inadequate spy equipment and little if any exchange between the U.S. and the UN forces. The intelligence operation was hampered from the first by a disjointed command structure and officials who reported to other capitals and had conflicting policy views.

The first Somalia mission was humanitarian. The second was military—the capture, arrest, and trial of General Aidid and the disarmament of his troops. Apparently, the third is now to work out a settlement with Aidid. In the meantime Aidid and the leaders of the other 12 clans are re-arming awaiting the March deadline for withdrawal of UN and U.S. troops. What do you think will happen?

Finally, let us talk about the use and misuse of American power and force. Is it happening again?

The Defense Department, following the advice given to Defense Secretary Aspin by Chief of Staff General Colin Powell, listed key concerns that should have been met before we sent 600 troops to Haiti to assist in the restoration of the deposed President Aristide. They were over ruled by the State Department. And so they went—to be turned back by a motley bunch of thugs.

Thank goodness the decision was made not to commit our troops to what would have been another Somalia on a grander scale but the original decision to show the flag and then withdraw it, simply encouraged the current regime in Haiti. The result was the murder of a Haitian Justice Minister who had been working with American officials on reforming the police. Just as we are ending our involvement in Somalia six months too late, we are getting dragged into Haiti. We have now tied our power and prestige to the restoration of a man who our intelligence officials say is unstable and incited his followers to torture and violence!

The practical result of all this has been a collapse of confidence in the Congress regarding the ability of this administration in the conduct of foreign and military policy.

Senator Bob Dole and others in the Congress have debated whether to prevent the President from sending troops to Haiti without prior congressional approval. To some, this debate may sound like the renewal of the War Powers Act. In fact, it was a vote of no confidence in the President's ability to conduct foreign policy.

Let me stress it is important that we not tie any President's hands in case of emergency. He is, in fact, the Commander in Chief. Again, the Congress cannot and should not conduct foreign policy but we must not permit mindless intervention where we now have commitments in places where we do not have strong national interest.

The fatal error is not in cutting our losses, but incurring them at all in places that do not involve our fundamental interests.

Now, maybe campaign promises have little consequences. Remember the famous middle income tax cut? But, I can assure you in foreign policy promises become commitments. When we cannot fulfill those commitments those within these countries are left hanging when we turn tail.

There is an irony to all of this. If former President Bush did not focus on domestic issues, President Clinton's interest seems to stop at the water's edge. That is an exceedingly dangerous situation. In being critical of current policy, we should be careful not to join a cut and run stampede. Isolationism is not the answer.

The restoration of a rational and strong foreign and defense policy lies squarely with the Commander in Chief. It may be a distraction for President Clinton but as we have seen in Somalia, it is life and death for our men and women in uniform.

Ask Mary Cleveland of Norfolk, Virginia, whose son was dragged through the streets of Mogadishu. Ask Mike Durant, the helicopter pilot just out of the hospital who was very nearly killed by a crazed mob. Ask the Rangers, who decided to stay with the body of the dead helicopter pilot, waiting for reinforcements. Criticized by an unknown senior official in the Pentagon, Ranger Platoon Sergeant Robert Gallagher said this:

"The Rangers have a bond. Whether you are killed or wounded, someone will look after you."

God bless him. Shame on his nameless, faceless critics. The Rangers lost 18 men without any gunshot and tank backup. They inflicted almost 1,000 casualties on General Aidid's forces. In spite of all of the problems with a civilian run operation, limited rules of engagement in hostile territory, and the lack of necessary equipment, the Rangers did one hell of a job.

My fellow Marines, this continuing debacle must end. We in the Congress must be vigilant in our oversight and review and insist this Administration meet our foreign and military policy challenges and responsibilities. There is nothing wrong with a healthy debate in defining our national interests.

While I do not believe it is in our national interest or feasible to commit troops to achieve political goals in Bosnia, Somalia and Haiti, the use of force will be necessary at some future date somewhere in a troubled and dangerous world.

While our attention has been focused on recent events, Secretary of Defense Aspin just came back from Korea where we see the continuing development of nuclear weapons. And, if you thought Saddam Hussein was public enemy number one, wait until you see Kim Jong Il. A nuclear North Korea sets off an arms race in South Korea, Japan, China and Russia. The North Koreans have a million man army with no other purpose but to once again invade South Korea.

This business is not peacekeeping, nation building, pacification or brush-fire involvement. It is serious business that is in our national interest.

It goes without saying I have been critical of President Clinton regarding the Administration's handling of our foreign and defense policy. I do not mean my comments to be partisan. I do mean them to be food for thought and a call for all Americans to insist we not repeat past mistakes. I will continue to insist on a healthy debate in the Congress with optimism we can unite behind our President in the conduct of America's best interests.

As General Lejune said in his original birthday greeting, "We have received from those who preceded us the eternal spirit which has animated our Corps and has been the distinguishing mark of Marines in every age. So long as that spirit continues to flourish, Marines will be found equal to every emergency in the future as they have been in the past and our Nation will regard us as worthy successors to the long line of illustrious men who have served since the founding of our Corps."

In behalf of our great Nation, our President and our Corps, thank you and Semper Fidelis.

JANE FONDA NEXT?—SENATE MAY SOON APPROVE ALARMING HALPERIN APPOINTMENT

Short of treason, what does it take to disqualify someone from securing a key position in the Clinton Administration's Defense Department? Nothing, apparently. So "civil libertarian" Morton Halperin, who collaborated closely with some of America's most vociferous enemies during the Cold War, may yet become assistant secretary of defense for democracy and peacekeeping.

Should Halperin be confirmed, he will have enormous sway over U.S. defense policy, including, it seems, sharing responsibility for putting American troops under United Nations command. He will also have access to our most precious military secrets, the very kinds of secrets he ferociously sought to divulge to the world when the Soviets were threatening us with nuclear annihilation.

The idea that this former, highly influential ACLU figure may actually be confirmed to such a powerful position within the Pentagon has positively alarmed influential members of the national security community.

Nevertheless, he may very well end up getting the job. No Clinton appointee, it should be noted, has yet been defeated on a vote by the Senate, where the Armed Services Committee, chaired by Sam Nunn (D-Ga.), is supposed to take up the nomination shortly.

So far, not a single Democrat has had a bad word to say about Halperin, an ominous sign for his detractors. The Republicans on the panel are virtually united against him—William Cohen of Maine is still riding the fence—but no one has yet become the point man in opposition.

And where is Senate Minority Leader Robert Dole (Kan.) in all this? Too silent for those who believe, like us, that the GOP should be turning the Halperin selection into the burning national defense issue it deserves to be. Hence the concern that Halperin may be approved after all.

Meanwhile, a curious alliance of the far left (the once Stalinoid Nation magazine, for example), a few ultraliberal "defense experts" (Alton Frye, Arnold Kanter and Jeremy Stone), a clutch of neoconservatives at the New Republic and even an important conservative writer for the Wall Street Journal have begun to rally around the Halperin flag.

Nothing in Halperin's past appears to distress those rushing to his rescue. They're willing to ignore or even forgive his working with Soviet sympathizers and Vietnamese espionage agents to savagely undermine our national security and intelligence operations, his efforts on behalf of those who blew some of our most sensitive secrets during the Cold War and his support of CIA turncoat Phillip Agee, the revolutionary Socialist who deliberately exposed hundreds of our CIA agents around the world.

When Agee "outed" our CIA station chief in Athens, Richard Welch, and Welch was subsequently assassinated, guess who came to Agee's defense? But even this astonishing embrace of Agee hasn't bothered Halperin's supporters.

They are apparently willing to have elevated to a key defense post a man who was so egregiously wrong about the Soviet Union that he was willing to proclaim:

"The Soviet Union apparently never even contemplated the overt use of military force against Western Europe. * * * The Soviet posture toward Western Europe has been, and continues to be, a defensive and deterrent one."

He also said: "* * * Every action which the Soviet Union and Cuba have taken in Africa has been consistent with the principles of international law."

Really, is this the sort of fellow the senators want to entrust with America's survival?

In the great historic battle between Soviet communism and Western democracy, Halperin, invariably, was on the wrong side. But, tush, say his more conservative supporters, what's a few mistakes among civil libertarians?

Instead of assailing Halperin, who should be permanently donning sackcloth and ashes for his abysmal record on defense and foreign policy issues, the alliance has decided to train its guns on former Reagan defense official Frank Gaffney of the Center for Security Policy. Gaffney's crime? He has effectively disseminated factual information about Halperin that should move every normal, red-blooded senator—Democrat or Republican—to veto his nomination.

Gaffney's research on Halperin, contained in a 36-page notebook circulated to both staffers and U.S. senators, is impeccable and can't be refuted. He's let Halperin hang himself by simply publishing lengthy, in-content Halperin quotations ranging from the positions on the Soviet threat to U.S. intelligence operations. Using a wealth of reputable material, including congressional hearings, the Gaffney document also convincingly rebuts efforts by Halperin's defenders to perfume his past and portray him today as a hard-nosed defense specialist whose actions are tempered by deeply held civil libertarian instincts.

Halperin's most remarkable apologist is the Journal's Paul Gigot, viewed by many as a stout conservative. But even Gigot admits that Halperin turned "wildly naive" on most issues of the Cold War, especially in "perceiving a 'defensive' Soviet Union."

Gigot, however, is altogether forgiving, while chastising conservatives for allegedly stretching the truth about Halperin and engaging in "reverse 'Borking.'" "Republicans and especially conservatives * * *," he writes in a reproving tone, "may want to ask if being wrong about the Soviet Union and Vietnam is a lifetime disqualification for public office * * *."

When you're talking about a national security job, Paul, that sounds good to us. Why in blazes shouldn't it count as a lifetime disqualification to be wholly, irresponsibly wrong on the most serious threat ever to this country's survival?

Halperin's Cold War performance, we would suggest, is not precisely the job resume expected for an assistant secretary of defense. And if we accept Halperin today, why not Jane Fonda or William Kunstler tomorrow?

Many Human Events readers may have come to know more about Halperin than they care to in the last few weeks, but for those who may have come in late—and for those senators who may be on the fence—we'd like to recapitulate just a small number of his most outrageous activities and associations:

Josh Muravchik, a neo-conservative who is opposed to Halperin, made this point in the August 1993 issue of Commentary. Morton Halperin, he noted, has been "a veteran battler for causes that ranged from liberal to hard-left. From the mid-1970s until the mid-1980s, for example, Halperin served as the director of the Center for National Security Studies, a spin-off of the radical Institute for Policy Studies (IPS).

"He also served as chairman of the Campaign to Stop Government Spying, an anti-intelligence coalition numbering among its member organizations the Black Panther Party, the Committee for Justice for Huey P. Newton, the National Committee to Reopen the Rosenberg Case, Women Strike for Peace, the National Lawyers Guild, the National Emergency Civil Liberties Committee and sundry other hard-left groups."

National security expert Francis J. McNamara, whose writings on Halperin have appeared in Human Events, stresses that Halperin's philosophy during the Cold War boiled down to the following. He would "strip the intelligence agencies of the weapons which the courts, Congress and the executive have found to be essential to the achievement of their mission—secrecy.

"He would make public their budgets, ties with academics and other sources, control of proprietaries, etc. He would go so far as to compel disclosure not only of diplomatic negotiations, but all research on new weapons systems * * * and would even oppose CIA covert action taken to prevent Libyan dictator Muammar Qaddafi from sneaking nuclear weapons into New York harbor. All covert action by the CIA and other agencies would be brought to a halt.

"The FBI, if Halperin had his way, would not be allowed to investigate anything but crime. All domestic intelligence collection would cease—by law. All wiretapping, too, would be brought to a halt, even that used to catch spies and learn the intentions, plans and plots of nations hostile to this country."

Halperin testified on behalf of David Truong, an anti-Vietnam War activist, who, along with Roland Humphrey, a USIA officer, was convicted of espionage in January 1978. They were charged with taking classified documents from the USIA, then turning them over to Communist Vietnamese officials.

Halperin made light of the documents that had been admittedly purloined, but the prosecution responded by saying that some of the materials, including a U.S. Embassy report on anti-Communist activity in Laos, did, in fact, contain information vital to our national security.

State Department officials, furthermore, insisted that individuals who were confidential sources of information for the U.S. were jeopardized by the activities of Truong and Humphrey, who eventually were sentenced to prison for 15 years.

And there's this interesting footnote (see Human Events, September 4 issue, page 5): Truong, free on bail in February 1979, pending the outcome of his appeal, attended a party staged by the Campaign for Political Rights celebrating the release of a "documentary" against the CIA, the FBI and other U.S. intelligence agencies. A smiling Halperin, who headed the CPR, posed for a press photo with the convicted Truong.

Halperin was, indeed, a strenuous defender of CIA renegade Phillip Agee. Extraordinarily, however, Halperin's defenders are in a state of denial.

"Another charge that slides into distortion," says the Journal's Gigot, echoing Halperin's left-wing boosters, is that "Mr. Halperin 'aided and abetted' Phillip Agee, a genuine scoundrel who leaked names of CIA agents in the 1970s. It's true Mr. Halperin showed bad judgment in testifying in Britain that more evidence should be heard before Agee was deported (which he was anyway). But his error seems rooted in the libertarian zealot's mistrust of all secrecy. He has always said that leaking agent's names is wrong * * *."

The "slide into distortion," however, is Gigot's. First off, we can only wonder why Gigot would suggest that a "libertarian zealot" be allowed a high position in the Pentagon where he would have access to our most precious secrets. Surely, this is akin to putting the family drunk in charge of the liquor cabinet.

More to the point, Halperin may have always said that leaking agents' names is wrong, but he still did his damndest to praise and protect Agee in his zealous efforts to leak the names of agents.

Halperin traveled 5,000 miles to London in 1977 to assist Agee in his anti-deportation hearings, even though Agee had already become a notorious leaker of CIA names and had informed Esquire a year earlier that "I aspire to be a Communist and a revolutionary."

In September 1975, in his publication First Principles, Halperin also lavished praise on Agee's book Inside the Company: CIA Diary for having supposedly exposed how the CIA operates in Third World countries. Most curious, in view of Halperin's insistence that he never favored the leaking of names, is that he never mentions—and certainly fails to condemn—the fact that the book he heartily endorses reveals the names and identities of over 700 people in all parts of the world Agee claims were officers, agents and co-operators with the CIA.

"CIA News Management," a column by the nominee, was published with Halperin's permission in Agee's 1978 book, Dirty Work. Publisher Lyle Stuart proclaimed in a newspaper ad for the book that it contained "a list of more than 700 CIA agents currently working in Western Europe. It completely blows their cover."

Stuart added: "But Dirty Work is more than that. A comprehensive picture of the CIA emerges in Dirty Work. [Two other contributors] * * * and Morton H. Halperin have all shown considerable courage in informing America about the seamy side of American espionage * * *."

And this only touches on Halperin's defense of Agee and his activities. Gaffney, in short, is right on the money when he charges Halperin with "aiding and abetting" Agee with his campaign to expose the identities of CIA agents overseas.

Morton Halperin, in truth, is a dangerous choice to handle America's defenses or to be anywhere near top-secret materials. His notoriously poor judgment in the past gives every senator, Democrat or Republican, liberal or conservative, ample justification to vote against his nomination. The American grass roots should bombard their senators in opposition.

[From Human Events, Sept. 25, 1993]

WILL COLBY TESTIFY IN FAVOR?—ARMED SERVICES POISED FOR HALPERIN NOMINATION

Morton Halperin, President Clinton's selection for the newly created post of assistant secretary of defense for democratization and peacekeeping, is hoping to round up heavyweight support for his controversial nomination.

Indeed, Scott Cohen, a former CIA official who served as a key aid to ex-Illinois Sen. Charles Percy (R), who chaired the Foreign Relations Committee in 1981, has come to Halperin's assistance. He's telling Armed Services Committee staffers that, while he didn't always agree with Halperin, he viewed him as an "honest civil libertarian."

He has also left the impression with staffers that former CIA directors William Colby and Stansfield Turner would be willing to testify on behalf of the former ACLU official. (Cohen informed us that, while he had not been personally in contact with Colby, for instance, he had heard that he would be willing to testify in Halperin's favor.)

Should Colby, Turner and, perhaps other ex-CIA officials go to bat for Halperin, this would be ironic in the extreme, since, as Human Events has documented in detail Halperin has waged a sustained campaign to cripple the CIA's effectiveness.

Republicans on the Senate Armed Services Committee, save for William Cohen (Maine), are, however, said to be still united in their opposition to Halperin, no matter what Colby or Turner or other important members of the national security community decide to do. Among those who are thought eager to confront Halperin over his past are GOP Senators Strom Thurmond (S.C.), ranking Republican on Armed Services, Trent Lott (Miss.), Lauch Faircloth (N.C.) and Dan Coats (Ind.).

Halperin, these Republicans and their staffers believe, is afflicted with dozens of important vulnerabilities, including his penchant for supporting unsavory characters who were eager during the Cold War to assist America's Communist foes.

Not widely known, for instance, is that Halperin came to the assistance of David Truong, an anti-Vietnam War activist who, along with Roland Humphrey, a USIA officer, was indicted for espionage in January 1978. The indictment charged that Humphrey had taken classified documents from the USIA, then turned them over to Truong, who, through couriers, delivered them to Communist Vietnamese officials. (See Francis McNamara article in Human Events, Dec. 29, 1984, page 10.)

Both Truong and Humphrey acknowledged they had turned over the purloined documents to Vietnamese agents in France, but they maintained they were not guilty of espionage because the papers they transmitted were not harmful to U.S. security. The ever helpful Halperin, a witness for their defense, expressed doubt that some of the papers had been properly classified and cavalierly dismissed the others as not being related to national defense.

The prosecution responded by saying that some of the materials, including a U.S. Embassy report on anti-Communist activity in Laos, did, in fact, contain information vital to our national security. State Department officials, furthermore, insisted that individuals who were confidential sources of information for the U.S. were jeopardized by the activities of Humphrey and Truong.

Despite Halperin's vigorous effort to get them off the hook, both men were convicted and began serving their 15-year prison terms in January 1982 after an appeals court had upheld their convictions and the Supreme Court refused to review its decision.

There's an interesting footnote to the case. Truong, free on bail in February 1979, pending the outcome of his appeal, attended a party staged by the Campaign for Political Rights celebrating the release of a "documentary" against the CIA, the FBI and other U.S. intelligence agencies. A smiling Halperin, who headed the CPR, posed for a press photo with the convicted spy.

In 1971, Daniel Ellsberg and Anthony Russo, both former employees of the Defense Department and its allied think tank, the Rand Corp., admitted they had unlawfully copied a two-and-a-half-million-word "Top Secret-Sensitive" report on the U.S. role in Vietnam and leaked it to the New York Times and other newspapers. Ellsberg and Russo were indicted on charges of espionage, theft of government property and conspiracy.

Swiftly coming to their assistance was a team of some 35 people, headed by the ubiquitous Halperin. As in the Truong case, Halperin testified that the "Pentagon Papers" as they had become known, would be of little value to the enemy, although this was contradicted by numerous military and diplomatic authorities. (Gen. Lyman Lemnitzer, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff during our early involvement in Vietnam and later supreme commander of NATO, tagged the leak "a traitorous act.")

Equally interesting, however, was Halperin's testimony that the "Papers" were really personal papers belonging to those who had compiled them when they were in the Pentagon: Halperin himself, Leslie Gelb and Assistant Secretary of Defense Paul Warnke. They were not government documents, he said.

It was routine, he went on, for officials in his position at the time, to take their personal papers with them when they left office and that this was not considered theft or a violation of security regulations.

This was a mind-boggling claim by Halperin, especially since the prosecution had discovered that Halperin, in an affidavit he signed when he joined the Defense Department, had promised to return all classified documents. Moreover, Gelb himself contradicted Halperin, telling reporters that he considered the study "government property," not personal papers that could be distributed to the public at whim.

What this incident underscores, of course, is Halperin's virtual disregard for classified materials.

Halperin's biggest Achilles' heel, as viewed by many on Armed Services, has been his support of Philip Agee, the pro-Communist CIA turncoat, who deliberately exposed CIA officials, even when his actions jeopardized these officials' lives.

Three of Halperin's defenders—including liberal defense specialist Alton Frye, Bush's under secretary of state for political affairs, Arnold Kanter and Federation of American Scientists President Jeremy Stone—have sent a four-page letter to committee members alibiing for Halperin. Halperin's "only 'assistance' to Agee," they write, was "to testify at a British deportation hearing in which he urged that the British national security service provide a valid reason for his deportation as required by law."

"Upholding due process for a then ACLU official," the letter goes on, "is not 'aiding and abetting' criminals any more than it would be the crime of 'aiding and abetting' for a lawyer to help a client."

That alibi, however, is not likely to assuage GOP committee members since Halperin has a history of being in Agee's corner. Not only did he travel to England to defend Agee—so small thing, even for an ACLU official—but he constantly defended Agee and his efforts to expose CIA officials and those who cooperated with them.

Halperin favorably reviewed Agee's first book, Inside the Company: A CIA diary, in 1975, even though Agee thanked the Cuban Communist party for the help it had given him in writing the book, which listed over 700 people in all parts of the world who Agee claimed were CIA officers, agents or cooperators.

In testimony before the House Intelligence Committee in 1978, Halperin assailed the CIA for launching a "disinformation" campaign against Agee and the publication he was associated with CounterSpy, whose listing of the CIA station chief in Athens, according to the CIA's William Colby himself, led to that agent's assassination.

There is a ton of other documents that Halperin's opponents on Armed Services can use against him, as Human Events readers are by now aware, but the bottom line remaining: Do the Republicans have the will not only to oppose him, but to go all out for a kill?

TO SERVE HER COUNTRY

The hospital at Cam Ranh Bay was a long way from Clayton, New Mexico, and events there in 1969 would forever change the life of 23-year-old Dotty Beatty. Assigned to the facility's intensive care unit, the Air Force second lieutenant, like others who served in Vietnam, experienced daily the extremes of war and human behavior. She carries the memories still.

"The sound of a chopper still raises my anxiety level. I wonder how many, how injured? I think the only people who hear a chopper before I do are the corpsmen and combat vets. For them it was the sound of relief—help for their friends. For me, it was a sound of dread—could I do enough?"

The Vietnam Beatty remembers was "a world with almost no rules, a different value system, different priorities. I find myself making decisions today based on the priorities of that setting."

Mary Foley was on a weekend pass at her parents Haverhill, Massachusetts home in February 1942 when she was abruptly ordered back to Fort Devens. The 24-year-old Army nurse soon found herself on the U.S.C. Uruguay, bound first for Australia and, ultimately, New Guinea. The initial destination had been the Philippines, but Bataan and the nurses stationed there were under siege and about to fall to the enemy. Foley would not be home again for three and one-half years.

"It was quite an experience for a shy girl from New England," says Foley of the generally intolerable conditions of the island—the jungle, the heat, lack of water and basic medical supplies. Assigned to the tropical disease unit of the 10th Evacuation Hospital, Foley came to dread the toll of the local mission bell.

"The bell was our signal to report to the hospital and to the incoming soldiers sick with typhoid and malaria," remembers Foley. "Considering the climate and the conditions, we took care of them as best we could and gave them as much comfort as possible. Without the nurses, the casualties would have been much worse. We were their lifeline."

Mary Foley continued to be a lifeline for sick and wounded soldiers upon her return to the United States. She worked at Walter Reed Army Medical Center in Washington, D.C. until 1953.

Representing different generations, Mary Foley and Dotty Beatty are linked by a profound sense of duty and love of country. As witnesses, often from the front row, and full participants in the struggles which have taken our nation from Lexington to Mogadishu, women have been premier contributors to the cause of freedom and political stability worldwide. From desk to field, from ship's deck to cockpit, from triage to battlefield, women have endured the horrors, stress, fatigue and other inevitable results of war. Women can proudly claim more than an ancillary role in U.S. defense. And now, at long last, their time of national recognition has come.

On Veterans Day 1993, a memorial in honor of women like Dotty Beatty—more than 11,000 who served in Vietnam—will be dedicated on the 2.2-acre site of the Vietnam Veterans Memorial in Washington. It will be the first memorial in the Nation's capital to specifically honor women's military service. Behind this poignant tribute, a statue depicting three Vietnam-era women, one of whom is caring for a wounded soldier, is an equally poignant message: Had it not been for the women who served in Vietnam, 90 percent of whom were nurses, there is no doubt that many more names would appear on the polished granite panels of the Wall which lists the war's fallen.

Of the dedication, Beatty says "there will be women who are confronting for the first time the fact that they were in 'Nam, and there will be men who were injured who are looking for 'their nurse.' It will be a powerful time for healing."

Recognition and healing on a national scale will continue when the Women In Military Service for America Memorial is dedicated in 1996. The memorial, which will include a visitors center, will be placed at the main gate of Arlington National Cemetery. It will recognize the dedication and valor of all 1.8 million women in uniform who have responded to aggression, despotism, humanitarian challenges and threats to America's security.

These two memorials are much more than mere symbols of atonement for the societal slight of the contributions of women in the Armed Forces. They will be tangible, lasting reminders of the selflessness of an extraordinary society—women veterans—which has achieved a place of great distinction in our history and our hearts.

Of our total veteran population of 27 million, 1.2 million are women who volunteered for military service. They too served under difficult and dangerous circumstances as nurses, saboteurs, scouts, couriers, switchboard operators, stenographers, translators, pilots and gunner's mates. A number have been highly decorated (including combat-related awards), some were prisoners of war, some remain buried in U.S. cemeteries overseas, and all have been important to both wartime and peacetime efforts. The fact is that we owe a great debt to our women veterans for their achievements, a debt that goes beyond granite or bronze commendations, important as they are.

On November 11, Veterans Day, take a moment to contemplate the contributions of Dotty Beatty, Mary Foley and the hundreds of thousands of women who have served in the Armed Forces. In the chronicles of patriotism and freedom, theirs is a story that captures the spirit, courage and inspiration that is America.—G.V. (SONNY) MONTGOMERY.

CONSIDER WHAT STAR WARS ACCOMPLISHED

(By Robert C. McFarlane)

WASHINGTON.—At a meeting not long ago, I asked Ambassador Vladimir Lukin, chairman of the Supreme Soviet Foreign Relations Committee in the 1980's, what role U.S. policy in general and the Strategic Defense Initiative in particular played in the Soviet Union's collapse. His answer was straightforward: "You accelerated our catastrophe by about five years."

Remarkable. More than remarkable in that an investment of about $26 billion saved us and our allies at least five years of much higher defense budgets—certainly more than $100 billion—not to mention ending an era in which all humankind lived under a balance of terror.

But today the subject of "Star Wars" is raised no in the context of its strategic worth but rather for its potential for scandal—an interesting comment on our political and social values.

Even allowing that the American contribution to the collapse of Marxism was relatively small, that role is no less striking. Anything that shortened an ideological change of such immense consequence is worth serious study.

In 1982, 25 years into the missile age, the U.S. had just about lost the struggle to maintain a strategic military balance based on offensive deterrence. It was clear that the Soviet Union would always be able to put more missiles in the field; it was not inhibited by an elected Congress or competing social demands on the treasury. The U.S. would have to compensate with superior quality, and for a time we did.

But by the end of 1982, when I was deputy national security adviser, two things seemed clear to me. First, we had squeezed just about all the comparative advantage we would find out of our technology, at least in offensive terms. Second, the American people and Congress were getting worried about a strategy that relied on building more and more nuclear weapons.

But what to do? We had to find a way either to get the Soviet Union to reduce the number of its warheads or to increase ours until we could fashion a new strategy. Unfortunately, we didn't have much leverage.

The value of defensive technologies—the ability with confidence to destroy incoming missiles before they come close enough to do damage—seemed attractive for many reasons. We had made a serious effort in the late 1960's to develop an effective anti-missile missile but were forced to conclude the the state of the art still favored the attacker.

By late 1982, however, new discoveries had been made. Adm. James Watkins, then chief of naval operations, advised Adm. John Poindexter and me that gains in the computational speed of computers and developments in high-energy physics (lasers, particle beams and other directed energy) had substantially lowered the technological risk of developing a truly effective antiballistic missile system.

As promising as the military implications might be, it seemed to me that such an investment would offer even greater political and economic leverage. Most important to me was the prospect that, as with the space program in the 1960's, our dedication of hundreds of scientists and engineers to this frontier technology would lead to scores of discoveries, all visible to the entire Marxist family and making it clear that our system worked better than theirs. To avoid such a threat to the ideological firmament, the Kremlin might be willing to pay a high price. Star Wars might be the leverage needed to get the Russians to decrease their number of land-based ICBM warheads.

Carrying out such a strategy faced huge problems. But I believed that if we played our cards right with Congress and the allies, we wouldn't have to build this system—the Soviets would come our way on arms control, slowly, everything come together, and by 1985 the program was a living "line item" in the budget.

As is now well known, our strategy worked. In Geneva, Mikhail Gorbachev and President Reagan pledged to reduce nuclear warheads by at least 50 percent for the first time. We had turned a corner.

As for the reports now that the Pentagon "rigged the tests" of Star Wars technology, I don't believe them. Surely no such "deception plan" was ever proposed to the President. And because any backfire would rebound to his discredit, any such plan would have been cleared with him in advance by Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger. I don't believe that there was such a plan. After three failures—all truthfully reported—when a success was reported in the same manner, I saw no reason to doubt it. As we all know now, hitting a missile with a ground-based interceptor isn't as Buck Rogers a problem as it once was.

MCNAMARA'S GHOST

(By Robert J. Hanks)

ALEXANDRIA, VA.—When Robert L. McNamara—formerly assistant professor at Harvard University, later head of Ford Motor Company—became Secretary of Defense in 1961, he brought to the Pentagon a host of bright young assistants and a determination to establish firm civilian control over the U.S. armed forces. With assistance from those youthful but militarily inexperienced executives (the so-called "Whiz Kids"), he succeeded.

He also brought a briefcase full of management techniques he had employed at Ford. Mr. McNamara seemed convinced that these procedures—used to produce automobiles—could be applied across the board to national defense. Among them, he placed infinite reliance on a management tool he had wielded in Dearborn: systems analysis.

Mr. McNamara entrenched an office—Systems Analysis—in the Pentagon, not only to analyze service programs but to originate them. One bright, young analyst during the latter McNamara years, Les Aspin, is now Secretary of Defense.

Then a newly commissioned Army Reserve second lieutenant, Mr. Aspin served his active duty obligation in Systems Analysis, wearing civilian clothes. He worked with computer models of military issues, many of whose solutions ultimately bore scant resemblance to battlefield realities in South Vietnam or to other military uncertainties then confronting the nation.

"McNamara's Band"—as Systems Analysis quickly became known throughout the Pentagon—sought to "quantify" everything. The underlying assumption held that computers, fed "quantified" inputs, could produce solutions to every problem; professional experience didn't matter.

Enemy "body counts" became a progress yardstick in Vietnam. Computers loved the numbers. Similar methodology spawned an "electronic fence," touted as the answer to North Vietnamese infiltration into the southern part of that tortured country. It wasn't, of course. Similar analytical failures abounded. One of the more senseless fixations involved development of a fighter aircraft for the Air Force and Navy. It typified Systems Analysis solutions' faults when applied to real-world problems.

SA combined diverse requirements of the two services—many incompatible—and established essential characteristics of one aircraft, the TFX, for Tactical Fighter Experimental, to meet the disparate Navy and Air Force needs. The "Whiz Kids" didn't realize that this would inevitably produce a plane whose every component had been reduced to the lowest common denominator. While Systems Analysis rammed the TFX concept through the Pentagon, a far better approach already lay at hand.

At that time, the F-4 Phantom reigned as the premier fighter aircraft in the world; produced by Grumman Aircraft, it strained the boundaries of technology. It proved eminently suited to carrier operations.

The Air Force simply took that plane and removed characteristics it didn't need: wing-folding mechanisms (for carriers operations) heavy landing gear for landing on pitching decks, reinforced tail structure to withstand enormous forces generated by arrested landings, etc. When the Air Force finished modifying the Navy version of the Phantom, it was a much lighter aircraft boasting significantly improved combat capabilities. It subsequently proved to be mainstay of the Air Force, particularly in Vietnam.

For years, the F-4, based afloat and ashore, ruled international skies while both services sought replacements for the aging plane. Each could have acquired a new aircraft, tailored to specific needs, far sooner and at less cost, had the Defense Department learned the lesson of the F-4. Instead, the Air Force had to buy several hundred F-111s (TFXs), those now still in service being used primarily as bombers rather than fighters.

With the nation's armed forces currently "downsizing," every defense dollar must be spent as wisely as possible. The country simply cannot afford to waste money applying theoretical solutions like the TFX to military problems.

One must hope that Secretary Aspin is not still wedded to his systems-analysis background, that he will use it as an analytical tool to examine service proposals—in the context of the experience accumulated on the battlefield by this nation's military professionals. America's shrinking armed forces cannot survive another McNamara-type reign over the Pentagon.

HALPERIN AS PEACEKEEPER?—QUALIFIED BUT CONTROVERSIAL, NOMINEE DRAWS FIRE

(By Rick Maze)

WASHINGTON.—The nomination of a long-time Washington insider to a new Pentagon post overseeing peacekeeping operations has turned into a fire storm of criticism aimed at the nominee and President Clinton's recent foreign policy setbacks.

On the surface, it would appear that Morton Halperin would make an ideal nominee for the newly created post of assistant defense secretary for diplomacy and peacekeeping, an important job in the post-Cold War world.

The 55-year-old Brooklyn native has taught nuclear strategy and arms control policy at major universities, including Columbia, Harvard, MIT and Yale. He served in the Pentagon as deputy assistant defense secretary for international security affairs during the Johnson administration and worked on the national security council staff under President Nixon.

MAN ABOUT TOWN

Critics have scrutinized his history and foreign policy opinions, finding fault and discrepancies. "Mr. Halperin is no stranger to Washington, and he is not a stealth nominee either," said Sen. Bob Smith, R-N.H., a member of the Senate Armed Services and Intelligence committees. "He has a very long and sordid track record."

More importantly, perhaps, his nomination for a post setting policy for U.S. military involvement in nontraditional roles comes as the first two post-Cold War peacekeeping missions of the Clinton administration have failed.

Halperin's hearings will become a forum to examine Clinton's foreign and military policies, predicted Sen. Trent Lott, R-Miss. Lott said Halperin has played a role—exactly what role is not clear—in drafting a presidential order, known as PDD-13, that would expand the role the United States plays in U.N.-led peacekeeping missions.

Under Senate procedures, Halperin's opponents could block the nomination indefinitely. Instead, they decided they want confirmation hearings so they can grill Halperin and at the same time blast Clinton.

Then, after the bruising hearings, they hope to either defeat Halperin outright or use Senate procedures to block action.

"What they are doing is unfair and despicable," said Lawrence J. Korb of the Brookings Institution, a former Reagan administration defense official. "There are a lot of things at play here that have nothing to do with his merits."

PARTISAN POWER PLAYS

Republicans are trying to get back at Democrats for blocking the nomination of John Tower to be defense secretary during the Reagan administration, Korb said. Emotions of Vietnam, a war Halperin came to oppose, also are at play, he said.

One moderate Republican, Sen. John Warner of Virginia, has suggested Clinton withdraw the nomination.

"It seems to me it is timely for the president and secretary of defense to take a second look, and a very careful look, at this nomination," said Warner, ranking Republican on the Senate Select Committee on Intelligence and a senior member of the armed services committee.

Halperin, through a Pentagon spokesman, declined to be interviewed, but a senior Pentagon official said Defense Secretary Les Aspin continues to support him.

"This nomination is winnable," the official said. "Halperin is being tarred for the very reasons he was selected. He is one of the few people who has thought about a world in which there is no East-West conflict and about a U.S. foreign policy that involves more than worrying about the next big war."

A TRIP BACK TO D-DAY

It will be 49 years this winter that Winnifred Boese's husband, James, was killed in the Battle of the Bulge, the Germans' last major counteroffensive of World War II. The couple had been married 13 months. Now 75, the San Diego resident has thought more often in recent years about her husband's Luxembourg grave, which she has never seen. When she heard that his old division was sponsoring a D-day trip next year, Boese signed right up. "That place [in my heart] is always empty," says Boese, whose tour will stop at the cemetery. "I think just going there and actually standing at the grave will kind of finalize it for me."

Thousands of veterans, their families, heads of state, history buffs and ordinary tourists will reinvade Normandy next summer. June 6 will mark the 50th anniversary of D-day, when Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower launched the massive Allied assault that eventually liberated Paris from German rule on Aug. 25, 1944. Like Boese, many will be visiting for the first time. Others will bid final adieus at the graves of fallen comrades, to the battlefields forever etched in memories and to the villages and the people still grateful to have been freed. Bob Pocklington, 69, a private specializing in demolition for the 28th Infantry Division in the Normandy campaign, has visited his old haunts 16 times. But the Eagle Rock, Calif., resident figures this will be "the last hurrah," since most of his fellow veterans are in their 70s.

Crowd control: Normandy isn't used to such concentrated tourism, and government officials on both sides of the Atlantic are reconnoitering to devise efficient ways of handling battalions of veterans, dignitaries and sightseers. With the leaders of the seven Allied nations expected to attend the events during the first week of June, security will be tight, access to historic sites will be controlled and roads will be blocked off; visitors probably will be ferried about by shuttle bus. Not surprisingly, the French government is urging casual tourists to visit the region another time. "Unless you are a dignitary, VIP or veteran, you probably won't be able to see much between June 5 and 8," says Claire Bigelow, director of the U.S. Normandy Tourist Board in New York. Those determined to brave the crowds, though, can outflank the logistical nightmare—with concrete plans.

Vets first: The United States will commemorate D-day with numerous ceremonies honoring the men who came ashore on Utah and Omaha beaches, the two American landing sites (see box). There will be a re-creation of the June 6 airborne assault that dropped 13,000 men near Sainte-Mère-Eglise, where the American flag was first raised over French soil on D-day. The week's emotional cap will be the U.S. memorial ceremony June 6 at the Normandy American Cemetery at Omaha Beach, where more than 9,000 soldiers are buried. The French and other nations are staging countless other events.

To avoid the confusion that ensnared the 40th anniversary—hordes of veterans didn't get to participate in some events—organizers are determined to make sure veterans receive kid-glove handling. "The vets are always the VIPs," says Lt. Gen. C. M. Kicklighter, USA (Ret.), executive director of the 50th Anniversary of World War II Commemoration Committee, the body coordinating all U.S. preparations. Some sort of pass will most likely be needed for admittance, since the French government will limit attendance. Kicklighter hopes to announce details by mid-October and will notify veterans' groups and military associations to make sure the word gets out. For more information, veterans should write to Maj. Thomas Rigsbee, World War II Commemoration Committee, 1213 Jefferson Davis Highway, Crystal Gateway Four, Suite 702, Arlington, VA 22202.

Given their ages and the logistical difficulties, many veterans are opting to take organized tours. It's a good idea, not only for obtaining accommodations but for guaranteeing ground transportation. Many also have contacts with local hospitals and doctors, should the need arise. But veterans should examine proposed itineraries carefully; not all the tour packages include stops for official U.S. events.

Military associations generally sponsor trips to their respective battlefields through tour operators. "We have so many military units going we feel like Eisenhower coordinating the next invasion of Europe," says Andrew Ryder of Galaxy Tours in Wayne, Pa. Galaxy, (800) 523-7287, is offering a 10-day D-day trip that begins May 31 in New York and stops in London, Southampton, Normandy and Paris for about $2,635 per person, double occupancy and including airfare. The French Government Tourist Office's "D-day Kit" includes a list of tour operators running trips to Normandy and other sites and a proposed list of anniversary happenings in France. Call (900) 990-0040—at 50 cents a minute—or write to Normandy Tourist Board, c/o FGTO, 610 Fifth Avenue, New York, NY 10020-2452.

While many of Normandy's 48,000 rooms have been gobbled up by the tour operators, free spirits who loathe itineraries can still find lodging during D-day week. "Liberté 44," an office set up by the La Manche Tourist Board in Normandy, can help you find accommodations in the Cherbourg, Mortain, Saint-Lo and Utah Beach vicinities. From the United States, phone (011) 33-33060644. Its eastern counterpart, the Calvados Tourist Board, (011) 33-31865330, can refer you to lodging around Caen, Deauville, Falaise and Omaha Beach.

If the remaining rooms fill up, the Association Débarquement et Bataille de Normandie 1944—set up to coordinate events in France—is mobilizing a host-family program for June 1-15. Veterans unable to find lodging can stay with a French family, free. For details, write to ADBN 44 at Abbaye-aux-Dames, BP311, 14015 Caen Cedex France.

Flight delay: Unless the flight is part of a package, hold off on buying tickets. "If you buy today, you will be paying a couple hundred dollars more than you need to," says Tom Parsons of Best Fares magazine. Spring, when bargain fares to Europe generally appear, is soon enough. And don't overlook consolidators, known for their cut-rate overseas fares. Parsons also suggests looking into flights to alternate cities, such as Rome or Frankfurt, then using an air or rail pass to end up in, say, Paris.

Cruise lines, too, are gearing up with special D-day sails. Cunard's Queen Elizabeth 2 will depart New York for Southampton and Cherbourg on May 29, with a star-studded crew including Bob Hope and Dame Vera Lynn, Britain's popular radio star who earned the nickname "The Forces' Sweetheart" with her BBC broadcasts of "White Cliffs of Dover" and "We'll Meet Again." The price for a 10-day crossing begins at $3,035 per person, double occupancy, and includes one-way airfare between London and any of 79 cities. Call (800) 221-4770 for more details. Stephen Ambrose, a University of New Orleans historian and noted Eisenhower biographer, will explain the nuances of the invasion aboard the Norwegian Black Prince as it follows in the wake of the sea crossing of 1944 during a four-day cruise that departs from Southampton on June 4. Bookings begin at $1,370 per person, based on double occupancy. Call (800) 749-1869.

In the ensuing weeks of D-day, other venues of World War II will get their due. Military Historical Tours of Alexandria, Va., and Valor Tours of Sansalito, Calif., are putting together tours to Guam, Saipan and Tinian and the Solomon Islands next year and Iwo Jima, Okinawa and the Philippines in 1995. Call (800) 722-9501 for more details. And the folks back home won't be forgotten. Washington, D.C., of course, will be host to scores of ceremonies, exhibits and pageants, and Chicago, New York City and Salt Lake City also plan some sort of official observance of D-day. But 1944 just may be outgunned by 1995, when America marks the 50th anniversary of V-E and V-J days.

LET'S REMEMBER WHAT VETERANS DID IN THE WARS

(By Emma Pollack)

First, you see the wheelchairs. Some of these chairs are a style propelled by the hand of the occupant. A few have electric motors and are easily set in motion. Others have an electronic device and can be operated with pressure from the chin or mouth. Several chairs are not self-propelled but must be pushed by another human being.

Why this concentration on wheelchairs? Because it is much easier than looking at the people. However, eventually in this outpatient clinic, the veterans take the forefront.

Almost any weekday there are hundreds of people waiting in this large room. They surround you, and the time comes when you cannot blind your eyes nor your mind to their existence. These men and women waiting here for medical treatment are a diverse group from all walks of life—various ages, sizes, races.

Soon you can no longer see them as a mass; your eyes begin to focus on the individual. You discover what they have in common, a certain look. A look that asks: "Why? What has brought me to this place in my life?"

And what is this place? It is a modern hospital for veterans that is staffed with dedicated nurses and doctors—though far too few. This is also a teaching hospital and a nursing home.

An attempt has been made to create an attractive decor, a cheerful atmosphere. Ironically, the color orange has been applied generously to walls, floors, furniture and fixtures. Most of the visible activity takes place in the outpatient clinic. This is where the veterans sit and wait, and wait and wait.

On this particular morning, my husband is here for a series of tests, and I am prepared to spend the day. Although it is not yet 7 a.m., a long line has formed at the check-in counter. The first person in line is an elderly man with sunken eyes, unshaved, frail. His clothes are much too large for his thin body.

His hand trembles as he gives his card to the clerk. Briskly, she recites a series of instructions and tells him to sit down. The man takes the seat beside me. He stares helplessly at his appointment card, and I know he is confused.

"Could I be of any help to you?" I explain that I have been here many times. He eagerly hands me his appointment card.

"Shortly, they'll call your name on the loud speaker and give your doctor's room number." He still seems nervous, uncertain.

"I'll be glad to show you the room . . . this big place can be so confusing." Now, he smiles and begins to relax.

And so the day goes on. I look at these sick, miserable people, so tired of waiting and so often bewildered. My thoughts go back in time.

The year is 1942 and the place is Washington. The streets are filled with the human machinery of war: soldiers, sailors, Coast Guard personnel and Marines. They, like me, are very young. They are looking sharp, bright-eyed and ready for action. Without complaint, many will soon leave for the fight zones—on the ground, in the air, at sea. These youthful warriors are prepared to fight, to suffer pain and loneliness, and ready to die if need be.

My mind plays tricks on me. The fighting men and women of wars past are moving about in the waiting area. A tall, broad-shouldered Marine is standing beside a wheelchair. The man in the chair has no legs. A sailor in a white, crisp uniform is sitting in the place where, only seconds before, sat a man whose records were lost. The veteran to whom I had offered my help was no longer there. In his place sat a young man in a blue uniform, a pair of silver wings above his heart.

My vision clears, and I see once again the pain and helplessness of those around me. But now, I see so much more.

I see a room filled with heroes.

So often, after the shooting stops, these wartime heroes become little more than an unnecessary expense. The veterans must now pass a means test, must prove their financial need.

The people waiting in this outpatient clinic for medical care are not poor folks asking for a handout—although, indeed, many are poor. When they were young and healthy, they answered the call of their country. Flags waved, bands marched and promises were made. Promises that must not be forgotten.

What do veterans really want? More than anything else, they would like to be treated with dignity and respect. They want the American people to remember what they did in the wars—and why.

This day in the life of these veterans is coming to a close. But tomorrow, the line forms again and the waiting room will be filled once more. I stand still a moment and take one last look around. A voice speaks to me, a call from long ago. "To you from failing hands we throw the torch; be yours to hold it high."

We must keep faith with those who fought to preserve the freedom so cherished by all the world.

(Emma Pollack is recently widowed. Her husband fought in two wars and received his care in VA hospitals. Her father fought in three wars and died in a VA hospital.)

THE 75TH ANNIVERSARY OF WORLD WAR I

November 11th 1918—At the whim of the victorious Allies and at a cost of additional lives, the fighting ceases, bringing an end to World War One at the 11th hour of the 11th day of the 11th month 1918. Total casualties for this war including all participating armies exceed 37,500,000 men. This figure includes a death toll of 8,500,000. Americans suffer 320,000 total casualties, once again proving that the cost of Liberty is high.

THE 50TH ANNIVERSARY OF WORLD WAR II

November 11th 1943—(Pacific-Bougainville) Marines hold the junction of the Mission and Numa Numa Trails after their successful drive, which kills about 550 Japs. The Marines (3rd Division) are ordered by General Geiger to drive in two directions, east and west, simultaneously to secure and hold an Airfield site. Also, additional contingents of the 21st Marines arrive. (Pacific-New Britain) The Japanese suffer more damage to their ailing Fleet at Simpson Harbor, New Britain, as two American Task Forces, commanded by Rear Admirals A.E. Montgomery, and F.C. Sherman, destroy one Destroyer, the Suzunami and inflict heavy losses to the Japanese Eleventh Air Fleet (twenty four enemy Planes against a U.S. loss of seven Aircraft). Montgomery's Force strikes from the southwest and Sherman delivers his blows from the northeast, despite bad weather. Sherman's Force retires without detection. The Japanese locate Admiral Montgomery's Task Force and strike without consequence, although between sixty to seventy enemy Planes pursue U.S. Land-based Planes from Barakoma intercept the Japanese Fighters and destroy over fifty of them. The U.S. loses three Planes. On the following morning no enemy Ships remain at Simpson Harbor. (China-Burma-India) General Chiang Kia-shek, after studying General Stilwell's proposal of November 5th, agrees to a combined British Chinese assault against Burma, with the Chinese being held in reserve until the British assault Kalewa. In the British Fourteenth Army area, the Japanese seize Haka. (Atlantic-Italy) The struggle to gain the mountains blocking the Fifth Army's approach to Rome still is highly combustible. The U.S. 157th Infantry is assigned the task of taking Acquafredda, with orders to move out, wedging between the 179th and 180th Regimental positions. Meanwhile, the Germans still feel secure that they can hold the Winter Line. The 2nd Battalion, 509th Paratroop Infantry, clears a portion of Mount Croce. Every yard gained during this campaign for Rome costs the Allies heavily. German soldiers do a masterful job of using the treacherous mountains to their advantage. They hold the high ground to observe all Allied movements. In a heated engagement involving elements of the U.S. 3rd Division, the Germans offer firm resistance near Mignano, then mount a counterattack. PFC Floyd K. Lindstrom's Platoon gives cover fire to a Rifle Company's advance when the enemy assault occurs, however, the Germans press ahead, forcing a withdrawal by the Americans, leaving Lindstrom's unit outnumbered about 5 to 1. Lindstrom advances with his machine gun, defying incessant fire and gains a position 10 yards from the enemy. Unable to score a kill, he intensifies his efforts and charges further over rocks and then kills two men with his pistol, confiscates their machine gun and returns to his own men. Still defying danger, he again returns to the enemy position and transports two boxes of ammunition back to his lines and begins firing his own machine gun in a fantastic display of dare that virtually breaks up the assault. (Atlantic-Russia) The Germans still hold firmly west of Kiev, but the Russians make progress. The Germans holding southwest of Kiev advance against the Russians.

RANGERS IN SOMALIA—ANATOMY OF A FIREFIGHT

(By Tom Donnelly and Katherine McIntire)

"It was the longest day of everybody's life," says Lt. Col. Tom Matthews.

Matthews leads 1st Battalion, 160th Special Operations Aviation Regiment (Airborne), and from his flying command post in a specially modified UH-60 Black Hawk, he had a God's eye view of the vicious fighting Oct. 3 in Mogadishu that claimed the lives of 18 Americans and left more than 100 wounded, and drove American policy-makers into retreat from Somalia.

What he saw began as a lighting strike which, 20 minutes into the operation, had succeeded in snatching one of its human targets alive.

Then, amidst the blinding swirls of dust came a nightmare from doorways, rooftops and corners of perhaps the most heavily armed neighborhood in Africa.

Devastating fire from unending rocket propelled grenades took out helicopters. Rifles poked out of windows and over walls, firing blind. Hand grenades were lobbed from all directions.

The snatch operation turned into a grim rescue mission, and the lumbering trucks and other wheeled vehicles necessary for completing the extraction turned from a necessity into a deadly liability, offering fat targets as they stopped to load more and more wounded Rangers.

What began as a successful mission got lost in the fog of war, and left some of the Army's most elite units—men of the 75th Ranger Regiment, Delta Force as well as Matthews' highly-trained aviators—bloodied and battered, if not broken.

This longest day began in the most routine way. The Oct. 3 mission would be the Rangers' seventh since arriving in Somalia. It was all part of a campaign, not only to capture Somalia warlord Mohammed Farah Aided, but also to dismantle his organization so that the U.N. peacekeepers could conduct their mission.

The target was in the heart of Aided's territory, known among soldiers as "the Black Sea." Lt. Col. Danny McKnight, the commander of the Rangers' 3d Battalion and the senior commander on the battleground that day, remembers "it was more the area in bad guy country" than the previous raids, which had been to more isolated areas. This mission would take McKnight's Rangers near the notorious Bakara Market, one of the most heavily armed regions of Mogadishu.

VALUABLE TARGETS

The targets seemed well worth it: Two of Aided's lieutenants were going to be meeting in a building in the northeast part of the city, two to three blocks east of the market. At about 1 p.m., intelligence sources learned that the two would be meeting in the middle of the afternoon. Over the next two hours, the intelligence was confirmed and the exact location pinpointed—across the street from the original target. Maj. Gen. William Garrison, the senior special operations commander in Somalia, told McKnight: "Execute."

McKnight was initially pleased that he would have several hours to prepare for the mission; most had been conducted with less than one hour's notice. The raid would be conducted according to well-rehearsed, standard operating procedures. But McKnight's force, built primarily on his battalion's B Company, would have time to study the layout of the target—a building near the Olympic Hotel, a local landmark—and review reconnaissance photographs.

Because the raid would take his men into a dangerous region, McKnight planned to take plenty of force and to attack by helicopter but extract his troops and their captives on the ground. A hovering helicopter made an inviting target, and secure areas to hold the captives or move wounded were not likely to be found.

All told, about 90 Rangers and Delta Forces troops would ride in six of Matthews' MH-60 helicopters. They would be backed up by other special operations aircraft: four MH-6 and four AH-6 "Little Birds," a search-and-rescue UH-60, and a command and control Black Hawk with Matthews aboard.

McKnight would lead a 52-man ground element, escorted by seven armored High Mobility Multipurpose Wheeled Vehicles, mounting grenade launchers and .50-caliber machine guns and with Kevlar liners and ballistic doors replacing the usual canvas doors. Also in the convoy were two utility HMMWVs and three five-ton trucks for the extraction. All told, about 170 men took part in the operation.

McKnight says he felt well prepared and well equipped for his mission. The one concern was getting in and getting out quickly.

MISSION TAKES OFF

On the ground, the Rangers crossed their line of departure at the Mogadishu airport at about 3:30 p.m. It took the convoy about 12 minutes to negotiate the narrow streets of Mogadishu—through the notorious K-4 traffic circle to their holding position about 200 meters from the target. The ground movement was accomplished without incident.

At the same time, the assault from the air began, led by the Little Birds. Four contingents of Rangers were dropped into blocking positions, while the remainder and Delta went for the "snatch" operation. Fast roping to the roof of the building where Aideed's men were said to be meeting, the operation, despite intermittent fire from Somalis, initially went well.

The "bad guy reaction was about what we expected, given where we were," says McKnight. What was surprising, however, was the intensity of the fire from rocket-propelled grenades, or RPGs.

"The fire never stopped," Matthews said. In fewer than 10 minutes, one Black Hawk was fired upon by 10 to 15 RPGs, he said.

A second problem came from "brown-outs" due to the dust kicked up by the hovering helicopters. In the confusion, one Ranger slipped off his ropes and fell about 40 feet to the ground, sustaining severe injuries.

The assault helicopters moved off. But the Little Birds and two of the Black Hawks, flying circular "racetrack" patterns, remained to provide covering fires from their miniguns and snipers onboard.

Twenty minutes after the assault, the snatch team had the men it wanted and called McKnight for extraction. "It was going extremely well," recalls McKnight, "very professionally done." The ground convoy sprinted to pick up the captives and the Americans.

As McKnight stepped from his vehicle to coordinate the extraction, a medic came running up with news of an urgent casualty, a Ranger who had fallen while fast-roping.

"We've got to get him out now. If we don't, I'm not sure he's gonna make it," the medic said.

McKnight agreed and put the injured Ranger in one of the cargo HMMWVs. He then detailed two of the armored HMMWVs as escort and sent them immediately back to the American compound for treatment. This small convoy would be ambushed and Spec. Dominick M. Pilla of B Company would be killed during the ride.

McKnight was now down to four armored HMMWVs. Back at the snatch site, McKnight went back to loading the "detainees." The pace of Somali firing was increasing.

Then came word that the supporting Black Hawk piloted by CW3 Clifton Wolcott had been shot down about 500 meters to the east. Sgt. Aaron Weaver, in one of the Ranger blocking positions, saw the helicopter get hit by an RPG.

Wolcott was flying at about 75 feet, Weaver estimates, searching for Somalis who could threaten the snatch site. The helicopter crew saw the Somali who shot them down, McKnight says. Wolcott had pivoted his Black Hawk to allow his door gunners and snipers to fire. But in doing so, he presented a broadside shot to the lucky RPG gunner.

Weaver says the RPG hit the Black Hawk's drive shaft and tail rotor, causing the aircraft to auto-rotate and begin to drift. Wolcott fought to control the wounded chopper, but it was going down, crashing onto the top of a walled compound and tipping halfway over. Wolcott was trapped inside, pinned in his seat. "It almost folded on top of him," says 1st Lt. Larry Perino, leader of B Company's 1st Platoon.

Wolcott and his co-pilot were killed, and one of the two other crew members was badly wounded.

FEAR OF GOD

Crew member SSgt. Charlie Warren said he "had the fear of God" when the chopper was hit. His first thoughts were of his buddies on board and he was able to brief the crew on the way down. The impact of the crash left him with a severely bruised pelvis, a dislocated knee and a broken wrist. Two medics pulled him from the wreckage and carried him to the other side of the bird, when he saw that the pilot and co-pilot were dead.

"That was my first realization of how bad the crash really was," Warren said. Because of his injuries and the crew's inability to get Wolcott out, it was hours before they could move to an adjacent building. "One of the medics brought me a rifle for protection. We basically stayed there until nightfall," he said.

The two snipers onboard recovered their senses and began to defend the crash against Somali militia, who attacked almost immediately. SSgt. Daniel Busch, one of the snipers, fought ferociously, killing perhaps eight to 10 Somalis until he was shot in the stomach and the femur.

From the air, Matthews in the command and control aircraft and the crews of the Little Birds could see the crash survivors. McKnight, on the ground, had to make a decision. He'd lost some of his combat power in escorting the injured Ranger back to the airport. He'd also lost one of his five-ton trucks to an RPG shot. And there was the question of what to do with the detainees. Up until then, he had sustained only modest casualties, and no one killed. In the end, there really was no question for McKnight: live Americans nearby needed his help.

1st Lt. Tom DiTomasso, leader of B Company's 2d Platoon, had seen the Black Hawk go down and could see Americans moving at the crash site. He quickly radioed McKnight and began to move to protect the crash. Quickly, Garrison made the decision to consolidate the rest of McKnight's force around the crash site. "We're going to go there with all our vehicles, see what's there, and we may be able to load everyone up on our vehicles and get out," he says. He still had a substantial force and had the bulk of his vehicles in working order.

As DiTomasso's element reached the crash site, CW3 Karl Maier landed his MH-6 helicopter in a nearby alley so narrow the rotors barely cleared the walls.

Maier's co-pilot, CW4 Keith Jones, leaped from the Little Bird in an attempt to rescue the wounded, while Maier held the controls with his right hand and provided cover with his submachine gun in the left.

Jones, covered by the crew and using his 9mm for protection, left the chopper to carry the mortally wounded Busch and another collapsed soldier to the helicopter for evacuation. The crew literally shot its way in and shot its way out of the rescue mission, Maier said. He expended about 150 rounds of ammunition and at one point during the rescue, Jones returned to the chopper for more ammunition before he was able to get the two soldiers loaded for evacuation. DiTomasso's platoon assumed the defense of the crash site, using the ballistic blankets that covered the floor of the downed Black Hawk as a shield as the crew tried to pull the wounded and the dead pilot from the wreckage.

One of the Rangers guarding the crash site had part of his face caved in after being hit by enemy fire, Maier said, but the Ranger refused to be evacuated, choosing instead to remain and protect the wounded who couldn't be evacuated.

Hours later, the same Ranger put his body over Warren—whose protective vest had been removed by medics examining his injuries—to protect him from incoming fire as they lay trapped in an adjacent building.

"It was just heroic acts like that that happened all day," Matthews said.

In short order, the search-and-rescue Black Hawk arrived at the crash with medics and a small contingent. Fifteen soldiers roped to the crash site from the search and rescue chopper, Matthews says. The medics and other soldiers—all with medical training—were able to stabilize all the wounded by the time they were rescued nearly 12 hours later, he said.

While the last two soldiers were roping down, "the search and rescue bird was hit with an RPG while lowering the medics, but was able to return to the port," according to Matthews and the Rangers. The wounded bird limped away, barely making it back to the airport. Upon landing, the pilots immediately switched to a back-up aircraft and returned to the air. Of those, 11 were either killed or wounded.

A few minutes later, McKnight's force began a larger relief effort. Perino's platoon and part of 3d Platoon, began to move on foot to bolster the defenses. The vehicles would follow after.

It took Perino's force 15 minutes to cover the ground between the snatch site and the crash—15 minutes of chaos and mounting casualties. In the rabbit warren of Mogadishu's meanest streets, a few dozen Rangers moved to the rescue of their comrades.

Every doorway, rooftop and corner could hold an unseen enemy. Often, Somalis would stick their rifles around a corner or out a window and let loose a burst, or toss a grenade over a wall at random. Still some women and children were on the streets. Gunfire, even heavy gunfire, was part of daily life in Mogadishu.

Perino's point man was hit almost immediately by fragments of an RPG round or a grenade, wounded in the leg. "We'd just moved out. I knew the vehicles were right behind me," recalls Perino. "So we grabbed him and pulled him back."

Weaver was driving the first vehicle they came to and took the wounded soldier aboard. Occasionally during the move, the vehicles would link up with the dismounts and retrieve whatever casualties they could. From above, Matthews directed the convoy toward the crash and the Little Birds poured fire on threatening bands of Somalis, even firing their personal weapons out the doors of their choppers. In groups of 15 or so, the Somalis moved constantly to ambush the Americans.

McKnight and his men were hard pressed. "We didn't know where we were going," remembers Weaver, the only NCO not to be hit in the ground convoy. "We were just told to move . . . but the E-2s, even the privates, were doing their job." Each crossroads was a shooting gallery, with Somalis firing from every side across the Americans' path.

"Cpl. James Cavaco got shot; then Sgt. Lorenzo Ruiz got shot; we were taking some pretty sustained casualties," says Weaver. Also killed were Sgt. James Joyce and PFC Richard Kowalewski. Weaver's vehicle also was hit by an RPG.

KNEE DEEP UNDER FIRE

Perino's men were now in their first serious engagement, taking heavy fire and casualties by the minute. "We just kept pushing," he says, "because the alleyways were such limited cover and the streets were so narrow. You had to move; it was the only form of security we had."

DiTomasso's 2d Platoon was under constant fire, too. He had only enough forces to cover the immediate area around the wreck of the Black Hawk. On one side of the street, a solid wall provided a good anchor. But the open intersections on either end of the crash and the broken wall to the north provided spaces for Somalis to fire on and infiltrate the Rangers' position.

Even as the mission to rescue Wolcott was being mounted, a third Black Hawk, piloted by CW3 Michael Durant, was sent to provide additional air cover. About 15 minutes after the first crash, Durant's helicopter was hit, on the western side of its circular orbit. Attempting to fly to the airport and safety, Durant crashed about 1500 meters to the south and west of Wolcott.

A rescue party in four HMMWVs—two that had never gone out and the two that had initially been sent back to safeguard the Ranger injured in the snatch operation—was sent to try to secure the Durant crash.

After trying three different routes to the downed chopper and running into an ambush at each, the convoy was forced back to the airport. Near the K-4 traffic circle, the rescue party ran into McKnight's ground convoy and returned with it to the airport.

Other efforts to rescue Durant were futile. Returning from his daring pick up of the wounded Busch at the first crash site, Little Bird pilot Maier was able to land MH-6 about 150 meters from the site where Durant's bird crashed, but none at the second site were capable of getting to the chopper.

Later, two Rangers fast-roped into the area of Durant's helicopter. They were able to pull Durant from the wreckage and defend themselves for some time, but were killed and their position overrun. Durant was taken hostage by the Somalis. His co-pilot, who survived the crash, was later killed by Somalis.

The crew, who may have survived the impact—Durant later told McKnight that he thought he heard them—did not survive the attacks.

CONVOY BECOMES LIABILITY

The attempt to get to Wolcott was bogging down, too. It was clear that the vehicle convoy was becoming more of a liability than an asset. They made inviting targets, lightly armed and constantly forced to stop to take on wounded. They still carried the detainees captured in the original raid. The lumbering, open five-ton trucks were especially vulnerable and a well-placed RPG shot could kill dozens of men. Ammunition, too, was running low.

In consultation with Garrison, and in view of the growing number of casualties, McKnight decided to pull back, limping into the airfield at about 5:30 p.m.

On the drive back, the Rangers were under constant fire, and the lone remaining cargo HMMWV was abandoned. "All the tires were flat. The engine was smoking," says Weaver. It was being pushed by the last five-ton truck. "We decided to destroy it in place, near the K-4 intersection," says Weaver. The armored HMMWVs all survived, "though they were pretty beat up," says McKnight, who was wounded when a round smashed through his windshield.

SSgt. Paul Shannon was in another Black Hawk whose initial mission was to drop off Rangers for the raid on Aldeed's lieutenants. After Durant crashed, Shannon's chopper flew to the site about two miles south of the first site and deployed two Rangers to assist the crew. After protecting the crash site for about 20 minutes, Shannon's Black Hawk also was hit in the right side by an RPG. Hit earlier in the mission and unable to fire his weapon, Shannon had been taken off his position at a door gun and moved to the back of the Black Hawk. Minutes later, when the RPG hit, the soldier who replaced him at the door gun sustained injuries that eventually cost him his leg. Shannon immediately started administering first aid to him and after the crash landing, another crew member helped tie on a tourniquet before he was evacuated to the U.S. hospital in Mogadishu.

The pilot nursed the helicopter to a nearby U.N. site where the pilots expertly performed a roll-on landing, probably saving the crew's lives, in Shannon's estimation. "Once I realized we were going to crash, the biggest thing was were we going to survive it. Everybody was pretty calm. Nobody screamed or anything like that. As soon as the U.N. APCs (armoured personnel carrier) pulled up we knew we were in a safe area," he says.

Back at the crash site, Perino found that DiTomasso's men had suffered seven casualties. The two lieutenants then moved to consolidate their forces, get the wounded under cover and push out their defensive perimeter to cover all the nearby intersections. Of the relieving dismounts, only Perino and two other Rangers had not been wounded. Though some of the wounded had been evacuated, about 15 were trapped at the crash site when the ground convoy was forced to turn back to the airport. Nor could the Rangers get Wolcott's body out of the downed helicopter.

After nightfall, the pace of Somalia attacks slackened noticeably, allowing DiTomasso and Perino to consolidate their forces further and get the wounded inside some buildings. "You'd get the odd RPG round, but we held our ground. We were able to keep anybody from coming in," said Perino. In one sense, the worst was over. In another, the worst was still to come: the waiting.

THE NEED FOR HEAVY ARMOR

On returning to the airfield, McKnight's first concern was to get care for his casualties. Step two ways to put together a relief operation to secure the two crash sites. There was a very little information about the second crash, except that it had been difficult to reach and was being overrun.

The immediate reaction company of the 10th Mountain Division quick reaction force, C Company, 2d Battalion, 14th Infantry, already had been dispatched to try to relieve the Rangers now hunkered down around Wolcott's downed aircraft.

Traveling in a convoy of HMMWVs and five-ton trucks, the ready company was ambushed just after passing east and to the north of K-4. An air assault was not a viable option, for three reasons: flying was extremely dangerous; the tight streets around the crash site would not accommodate a good landing zone; and the 10th Division infantry required the choppers to land in order to disembark.

The ready company returned to the airport at about 7 p.m. Clearly, busting through to the trapped Rangers would require a larger force and, more important, armor protection.

There were no U.S. heavy forces. Defense Secretary Les Aspin had denied a request from Maj. Gen. Thomas Montgomery to deploy armored and mechanized infantry units to Mogadishu to protect U.S. and U.N. troops. Any armor would have to come from other U.N. forces in Mogadishu.

The first step was to summon the rest of the quick reaction force, and a second company was ready by about 7:45 p.m.

Despite the four and a half hours of agony in assembling the relief force, McKnight is more than satisfied with the effort. The danger to the Rangers around the crash site lessening with darkness, and McKnight remained in constant communication with Perino and DiTomasso. "There was not a requirement that they have to get out there in two hours, because those guys were secured; they were consolidated," he maintains. "They were defending."

The wounded had been stabilized.

The political, diplomatic, and—more practically—language barriers of assembling the multinational relief force were daunting. The U.N. command at its best was a cooperative effort between various national armies; Montgomery and his superior, Turkish Lt. Gen. Civek Bir, do not enjoy the luxury of unity of command. Most coalition operations had to be cleared with the respective countries' defense ministries, not a recipe for fast action.

In the event, the relief column would marry the two light infantry companies, about 50 Rangers, U.S. troops in armored HMMWVs, four Pakistani M48 tanks and 24 Malaysian wheeled armored personnel carriers.

"I think the process was correct, a good deliberate process, so when you get out there, you don't get all screwed up," contends McKnight.

Among the Rangers who returned in the rescue operation was Weaver. It was a difficult order to carry out. "For myself, I'd have to admit I was scared. I was wondering if I'd make it out and back again."

Among the Rangers on the relief operations were cooks—"everybody helped out," says Weaver. They linked up with the 10th Mountain and the Pakistanis, then made a rendezvous with the Malaysians near the port of Mogadishu. The odd task force, 300 strong, crossed its line of departure at about 11:30 p.m.

Despite the long wait inside the perimeter, Perino knew that once his defenses was consolidated, the worst was probably over. The tension of the move to the crash site eased somewhat; darkness provided more confidence.

Throughout the operation, the command and control helicopter circled above, and the Little Birds were cycled through.

That is not to say there weren't tight moments. "The Little Birds fired plenty of 'danger close' rounds," says Perino. "We're talking 50 meters away with 2.75-inch rockets. But the [Somali] fire really came sporadic once it became dark. As long as we had ammo and as long as we had water . . ."

The volume of RPG fire was the most unsettling. "If you were anywhere around that helicopter, you were going to be a target," says Perino. "Several guys went down to fragments from RPGs. One went through the wall of a compound where I was and killed Smith. There was still the stress of being out there. But it was a lot better than being in the streets."

Like previous relief efforts, the final rescue column's progress was marked by repeated ambushes. At one point, Somali fire became so intense that the 10th Mountain jettisoned its lightly armed HMMWVs and rode inside the Malaysian APCs. The column took an indirect route, circling to the south and coming in from the east. At 2:30 a.m., Oct. 4, Mogadishu's longest day came to an end.

PASS THE NORTH AMERICAN FREE-TRADE AGREEMENT

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. KOLBE] is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mr. KOLBE. Madam Speaker, I have taken this time this evening to do one more special order on the subject of the North American Free-Trade Agreement. I am joined here this evening by my good friend from California [Mr. DREIER].

We are down to, and we can almost count them now in hours, the last few days, on an issue that is truly one of the defining moments for American history. I have said this before and other Members have said it, but I think it bears repeating for my colleagues in Congress and for all America, and that is, this vote will be one of the most significant, if not the most significant, votes that my colleagues will cast in their entire career in the Congress of the United States.

We have cast a lot of very important votes in the 9 years that I have been here. I think back to earlier this year on the issue of the budget. I think back to the budget summit agreement in 1990, to the vote on Desert Storm in early 1991. I think back to the votes on the tax bill in 1986, and to the issue of flag burning and a constitutional amendment on that. These have all been very difficult votes, and ones in which all of us felt there was a great deal at stake.

But I can say without hesitation that none of those carry the consequences of this vote that we will cast in just another 7 days, on Wednesday of next week. Because the vote on the North American Free-Trade Agreement is not just about whether we will have a free-trade agreement with Mexico and with Canada. The vote on the North American Free-Trade Agreement is about the future of this country. It is about the direction that this country is going to go.

There are those in our country today who are fearful of competition. Not just with Mexico, but with the world. Many of them remember the years at the end of World War II when the United States stood astride the world economy and there was no competition to the United States, and we did not have to ask other countries for good trade arrangements. We were the only source of goods for those countries.

But those days have passed, and the United States is truly living in a global economy. There is no escaping that. We may wish that it were not so. We may wish we could go back to the days that were there once before, but we cannot do that.

So the question which faces my colleagues this next week is, Does the United States have enough courage to compete with other countries of the world? Do we have enough courage to believe that American workers are productive and can compete in the rest of the world? Or do we believe that the only hope for the United States is to erect a barrier around this country and to deny competition with other countries? That is the issue which we face in this vote. And I believe that it is a most significant vote for that reason.

Madam Speaker, my colleagues will, I know, consider very carefully the pros and cons of this, what it does to their district, and the economics of it. But in the end they must understand that this has to do with where the United States will stand in the world today.

I know that my friend from southern California understands that very well, and I am pleased that he is here this evening with me as we go through some of the arguments that have been made.

Madam Speaker, I am very pleased to yield to the gentleman from California [Mr. DREIER].

Mr. DREIER. Madam Speaker, first of all, I would like to compliment my friend from Tucson, who has worked on this issue for a long period of time. It was 6½ years ago that I was privileged to join as a cosponsor of legislation with the gentleman calling for the establishment of a free-trade arrangement in this hemisphere, specifically with Mexico, because it seems to me that we need to recognize that we have a 2,000-mile border with Mexico and there is nothing we can ever do to make that change. I think my friend's remarks, Madam Speaker, are right on target here.

Because if you look at the last half century, the United States of America has successfully brought about victory with the Second World War and then the cold war, four decades of great difficulty, tremendous expense, tremendous cost. My friend from Garden Grove, who spoke here just before me, talked about the fact that a shot was not fired in the Reagan administration to win the cold war. But there was a tremendous cost that was paid and shouldered by the United States, a great responsibility, so as we, in a week, a week from today, maybe at this time in exactly 1 week, as we prepare to cast our vote on the North American Free-Trade Agreement, we have to make a determination. Is the United States of America going to stand, as it has for at least the last half century, having won the Second World War, having won the cold war, and proceed, as we face the millennium, with leading the world toward the change that the 21st century will bring. Or are we going to choose to, for lack of a better term, Madam Speaker, chicken out and stick our heads in the sand and say that we have this ability to stand alone and provide what is needed for our people and at the same time see our economy grow and the standard of living in the United States of America grow.

Clearly, while we listen to opponents to NAFTA say, "I am more concerned about the United States of America than I am the entire world," well, quite frankly, Madam Speaker, the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. KOLBE] and I have the United States of America as our No. 1 concern and the consumers of this country and the workers of this country, contrary to some of the rhetoric that we have been hearing from a wide range of people who have been opponents of the North America Free-Trade Agreement.

Mr. KOLBE. I appreciate the comments you have made. I think it sets us off on a very good beginning to the dialogue we will have this evening.

Something you just said reminds me of a comment that I heard when I was in Mexico a couple of weeks ago, and we met with a group of people from the Mexican business community.

One of them said to me at this dinner that we had,

Two things in my life have astonished me. One is the fall of the Berlin Wall and the end of Communism. Who would have ever thought it possible that that could have happened in our lifetime? But the other thing that happened to me, when I was making a business trip to the United States last week and was in several cities and I found that there are so many Americans who are afraid to compete with Mexico, a country which has an economy 2½ percent the size of the United States economy.

I don't believe Americans are afraid to compete. We know that we can compete, and we have seen recently companies that have announced they are moving their manufacturing plants back from Mexico to the United States, thanks to NAFTA. They can afford now to produce them in the United States and ship the products down to Mexico. They are moving them back because they are more productive in the United States, and they only have those plants, as my friend knows, in Mexico because the barriers that Mexico erected to our doing business down there made it necessary to leapfrog over that barrier and establish the factory in Mexico to do business.

Mr. DREIER. Am I not correct in concluding that 70 percent of the business that is done by United States-owned operations in Mexico is done for the Mexican consumer and not to send back to the United States, as so many opponents have often argued?

Mr. KOLBE. That is correct. It is at least 70 percent. I think it is actually slightly higher than that. So most of our products that we are producing down there are for the Mexican economy. But now we do not have to do that. We can produce that product, with NAFTA, we can produce that product here and sell it in Mexico.

When people ask us, what is the North American Free-Trade Agreement, I think there is one fairly simple answer. It is a tax cut. It is a tax decrease. It is a two-way tax decrease. We decrease taxes on the products that come from Mexico, yes, but our average tariff is only about 4 percent. But even so, that means consumers in the United States will be paying 4 percent less for those products that come from Mexico, because they will not be taxed on it.

That means our consumers are better off.

Mr. DREIER. This bill that we are going to be faced with next Wednesday is, over a 5-year period, a $1.5 billion net tax cut for Americans. And anyone who would choose to vote against the North American Free-Trade Agreement is voting against a 1½ billion dollar tax cut for Americans.

Mr. KOLBE. My friend is absolutely correct. This is a tax cut. It is a tax decrease. There is no way to get around that. There are some user-fee increases, but they do not match the tax cut that we have in there. So it is a net tax decrease. And no one, nobody voting against this should be allowed to misunderstand that. They are voting to keep higher taxes in place, if they vote against this.

But what is important about this, it seems to me, is the fact that the real tax cut here in on our products, that Mexico cuts their tax, their tariff at the border on our products going down to Mexico. That means that we will be able to sell more products down there.

Let us just take, for example, automobiles. We are going to get to that in a moment. They are in the special category. Maybe we should take something like a refrigerator today. Actually, refrigerators are a good one, because they have a 20-percent tariff.

Let me just give you this example here.

Mr. DREIER. Household appliances. If we could ask our colleagues to focus on this, and my friend will be able to explain the structure right now the way it exists and the way it will exist under NAFTA.

Mr. KOLBE. What you have there on that second item here, household appliances, you have a Mexican tax that right now is 17 percent on their products. I am going to focus just on that for the first moment and not the second one.

That means that if General Electric wants to ship a refrigerator to Mexico, let us say it is worth $500, there is a 17-percent tax or $75 on top of that in a tax, if my math is correct there, $75 tax on top of that in order to get that refrigerator to Mexico.

Now, if you take that tax off altogether, common sense tells you some more people that cannot buy that refrigerator today are going to be able to buy it, if you take that huge tax off of it.

Mr. DREIER. My friend is absolutely right. I think it is important for us to realize that we have often heard in this debate about talk of Japan.

Vice President GORE mentioned it last night in the debate with Ross Perot. This 17.1 percent average tariff, which exists today on United States-manufactured refrigerators and other household appliances going to Mexico comes down to zero under the NAFTA. Right now it is really negligible for any Mexican-manufactured household appliances coming in the United States. Again, we have one-way free trade, because the Mexicans have access to our market. But this 17.1 percent average tariff remains for Japan, Germany, and other countries in the world that are not part of the North American Free-Trade Agreement.

And I think, Madam Speaker, it is important for us to realize that this 17.1 percent tariff here that exists today, if we defeat the NAFTA, it stays. And some would argue that to deal with environmental cleanup in Mexico, recommendations have been made that they even increase that 17 percent tariff, if the United States choose to defeat NAFTA. We all know that there is going to be certainly an invitation extended by the Japanese Government and businesses there, others in other parts of Western Europe and the Pacific rim, to Mexico to embark on a NAFTA-like arrangement with them.

It seems to me that we should benefit, the American consumer and the American worker, by bringing that barrier down.

I thank my friend for yielding.

Mr. KOLBE. My friend makes a very good point. Vice President GORE, I think, made the point very well last night when he said, we have had an experiment with both ways. We have tried it your way and we have tried it our way. And he said, the old way was when Mexico had these tariffs.

We know what happens when Mexico reduces its tariffs from an average of 50 percent to an average of 11 percent, from a top rate of 120 percent to a top rate of 20 percent. We know what happens with that.

Our exports to Mexico have gone from $13 billion in 1987, the year after they joined the General Agreement on Trade and Tariffs [GATT] to last year $43 billion. We sold $43 billion of goods to Mexico.

Mr. DREIER. From $12 to $13 billion to $43 billion. We have gone from a deficit of about $5.7 billion to a surplus of a like amount, just about $6 billion. So because we flipped it around and because they have brought their tariffs down, have opened up their markets to our goods, we have a surplus of $6 billion with Mexico, and we have increased by more than 100 percent the amount of goods we are selling in Mexico. Think what can happen when we bring that down to zero.

I would be happy to yield to my friend, the gentleman from California [Mr. DORNAN]. However, if I could just a moment, before I yield, say that his special order focused on the issue of the end of the cold war, and he referred to the fact that Ronald Reagan was able to bring about victory in the cold war without firing a single shot.

It seems to me that as we look at the next logical step beyond the cold war, it is getting to the point where we recognize that trade is the currency of friendship, trade is the currency of freedom, trade is the currency of peace, and these are the natural steps that are taken, bringing down barriers.

As we brought down the Berlin Wall, we want to bring down the barrier for the flow of free trade. My great friend from Garden Grove is one who spent a great deal of time working on that issue.

Mr. KOLBE. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from California [Mr. DORNAN].

Mr. DORNAN. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding. I am moved to call the gentleman the sunshine boys, not because we all come from the Sun Belt, and States that, well, the gentleman's economy in Arizona is not as bad as ours in California, but the reason I want to call the gentlemen sunshine men is because they are so optimistic the way they have approached this treaty, and the way they delineate for all of our Americans who have been through a lot of fear tactics here that this is the way to approach the future.

One of the things the gentleman from California [Mr. DREIER] said to me at the end of my special order was that if we vote this down in this Chamber, it will be a sad day in that post-cold war era, because we will have chickened out on an opportunity here to create a family in all of North America, to start treating our first cousins south of us the way we treat our first cousins north of us in Canada.

More than that, I wish we could kick around something that I have learned in classified and declassified briefings about what negative signals from this Chamber will do to the entire Central and South American area, this entire hemisphere, with the exception of Brazil, which is still having its problems from government corruption, and they speak Portuguese there, the line of demarcation. They came up on the east side of that.

However, in every other country, the major nine nations in South America, the Dutch-speaking nation of Surinam, the English-speaking nation of Guyana, and all those nations north of the Panama Canal, as David and I used to say in the Panama Canal debates, everybody north of that manmade body of water called the Panama Canal is a Norteamericano. We are all North Americans here.

I would ask the gentlemen to tell me something about their experiences traveling south of the border, the two of you, bumping into ambassadors from the South American countries. This will be a super tragedy for all of our fellow Americans north and south.

Mr. KOLBE. If I might reclaim my time, I think the gentleman has raised a very, very good point. NAFTA is really more than a vote on a trade agreement with Canada and Mexico. It is a vote to open a door. Mexico and NAFTA is the hinge to this door of all of Latin America.

We have today, and my friend, I know, is aware of this, but there may be some out there who are not aware of the fact that we now have a bilateral framework agreement that is kind of like an initial agreement, with every single country now in Central America and Latin America. What those agreements say is, "Mr. South American, if you will just open your economy, if you will get your debt under control, if you will reduce your inflation rate, if you will reduce your interest rate, if you will reduce your public sector spending, and if you will open up your markets to other countries, there will be a reward at the end of that. The reward will be that the United States will do more trade with you."

They have listened to us.

Mr. DORNAN. Exactly.

Mr. KOLBE. They have watched us go through this NAFTA process. We have told them, "Wait, let us finish with Mexico and then you will be next in line." Chile is banging on the door today. They are ready to join NAFTA tomorrow, the day after we do this.

The other countries of Latin America, many of them are ready immediately.

What do we say to them? If we say, "No, it is okay for us to trade with Canada, it is okay for us to trade with Europe, but those of you who are Latinos to the south, we are really not interested in free trade, we did not really mean what we said," it would be a devastating blow.

My friend, who has traveled in Latin America far more extensively than I have or ever will in my lifetime, knows the consequences of that for many of these fragile governments that could easily turn hostile again, go back to military government, where democracy, which is just trying to gain roots there, we could lose so many of those democracies.

I yield to the gentleman from California [Mr. DORNAN].

Mr. DORNAN. Mr. Speaker, Mexico is growing so fast, I was stunned again to be re-reminded today that 50 percent of the population is under 20 years of age.

Mr. KOLBE. Actually, it is under the age of 17.

Mr. DORNAN. The Philippines is the only other country we have seen with that low a youthful demographic. But I notice the President today in his press conference said 90 million. Last night Ross Perot talked about how he wants to help 85 million people.

Mr. DREIER. If the gentleman will yield for just a moment, Ross Perot talked about 85 million people living in poverty in Mexico. If that is the entire size of the population, Mr. Perot has failed to recognize that the middle income wage earner in Mexico, the numbers are virtually identical to the entire population of Canada. We have been given figures of between 20 million, as high as 25 million people in the middle class in Mexico. Ross Perot continues to use this line, 85 million people living in poverty.

Mr. DORNAN. If the gentleman will continue to yield, like there are 35 families with no children, just maybe 70 people, husbands and wives, running the whole show, all being extorted for $25 million.

I noticed an irony in the debate last night. AL GORE returned to the AL GORE I knew in this Chamber for 8 years. We were just, as I am Jim's classmate in my second life, here in 1984, I first came with the gentleman from Pennsylvania, BOB WALKER, and Dan Quayle, and a lot of people, the gentleman from Missouri, DICK GEPHARDT, the majority leader, in the class of 1976.

AL for 8 years was a strong moderate voice from the South. Last night he did something that I am sure I will see on the "Rush Limbaugh Show," the TV show, tonight. He said, "Why are you talking such doom and gloom," he says to Ross Perot, when that is exactly what Limbaugh points out, that on another issue, the health care thing, that

Mr. Clinton down in North Carolina actually pulled his hands in and shuddered his body and said, "Thirty-seven and one half million Americans, they are all living in fear of what is going to happen to their health care insurance policy."

Now they are on the right track. It is fear-mongering to reject all of the optimism of the post-cold war and to start here, on the northern half of this hemisphere, treating everyone as equals and opening up these barriers; that except for the first couple of millenia, where most fights were over turf and not necessarily the product that was grown on that turf, but in modern times, especially since the industrial era, the most annoying thing to triggering struggles that eventually turn to bloodshed of the youngest, most able members of societies were those caused by trade barriers.

Removal of trade barriers causes nations to grow in commerce, which is the dream of all civilized people, to say, "I would like to visit your country. You visit mine. What do you make? Here is what we make. Let us start trading things."

Mr. KOLBE. Reclaiming my time for a moment, I just want to inject here, the gentleman made a point as eloquently as Jack Kemp did today in the remarks that he made at lunch when he talked about this as a vote for freedom, freedom for Americans, for people everywhere.

We vote not only when we go to the ballot box, but we vote every day when we take out our wallets and we spend our dollars. There are two ways we can increase our income. One, we can have growth in productivity, which allows us to get a larger real wage. The other way we could do it to reduce the cost of the products we buy.

Mr. DORNAN. Exactly.

Mr. KOLBE. When Mexicans or Americans can get more choices and lower costs, then we have more money, disposable income, to spend on other products. That is freedom. That is increasing our freedom and increasing our real wealth.

We tend to forget in this debate all the time, and I know my colleagues know this, we tend to forget the consumer. We are always talking about protecting this job, protecting that job. What about the American consumer? What about consumers all over the world that have an opportunity to buy more products, to have more choices, to have lower prices?

Consumers need to be spoken for, too, in this debate. I think that is a very important point.

Mr. DREIER. If the gentleman will yield on that particular point, one thing that needs to be underscored again is we have looked at the improvement of U.S.-manufactured automobiles that has taken place. I know my friend from Garden Grove has a few old clunkers that were made in the early 1980s.

Mr. DORNAN. Nineteen seventy-eight, my Bronco.

Mr. DREIER. A 1978 Bronco. Some of those vehicles do not run nearly as well as those made in 1993, 1992. Why? Because of worldwide competition. Japanese and German automobiles came into the United States, and most every domestic automobile manufacturer acknowledges that if it were not for that competition that came to the United States, we would not have seen the tremendous improvement in the quality of automobiles, and trucks, and Broncos and other things built right here in the United States. It is worldwide competition which has improved the quality of life for people not necessarily buying those items from other countries, but because of the availability of those other items from other countries. It is the enhanced quality of life here in the United States.

Mr. DORNAN. I have to race off, so let me ask you guys a goodbye question. My staff is taping all of this so that I can look at your charts, along with the 1,300,000, maybe more, people following the proceedings of this House, and Madam Speaker knows that they are paying attention. And I think some of the debates on this floor, not that little quickie debate on Larry King last night, may get rid of this fearmongering. When we go back in, we are building up to this vote on the 17th, a week from today. If we can have like truth squads on the floor next week to at every point politely ask people to yield, to stop the fearmongering and to counter, always calmly and with truth. I think one of the reasons my colleague, AL GORE, my former classmate from the great class of 1976, prevailed last night was that he kept his cool, and he responded, and he asked many tough questions. And when Ross Perot, my friend of many decades of fighting for our missing in action, looked at him and said, "Work at it," I said to myself back at my pal, Ross, will you work at it, please, and come up with some facts and figures, because when Vice President GORE said how are you going to help those 80 million people, even if we were to accept this fallacy that they all live in poverty, with a sombrero on and a serapi, leaning against a wall wondering where their next job is coming from, if that cliché, sort of racist image were true, then where were Ross Perot's answers on what to do for them. He said study it and come up with a better treaty.

No. This thing has been studied to death, and the moment is now, a week from today.

Mr. DREIER. You know, the response to coming up with a better treaty, of course, is to come up with a treaty that the loser presidential candidates can all support, Pat Buchanan, Jesse Jackson, Ralph Nader, Ross Perot, Lyndon LaRouche, Jerry Brown, those six. And there are also a few of our colleagues might be included in that mix, TOM HARKIN, DICK GEPHARDT.

I mean the fact of the matter is trying to come up with an agreement that could gain the support of all of these people with very disparate views is impossible.

Mr. DORNAN. You guys have worked so hard. Are we getting some of these Nobel laureate economists to visit the Hill next week?

Mr. KOLBE. We certainly have them speaking to Members.

Mr. DREIER. They have met with the Members, and that is the most fascinating thing. Paul Samuelson's statement that he made at the White House was incredible. He said when Milton Friedman and I walk up the sawdust path together, now there has got to be something right. And the way he put it in his statement down there, he said, "You know, the opponents to the NAFTA looked long and hard to try to find a Nobel Prize winning economist who would oppose NAFTA." Thirteen of them are alive today. Every single one supports the NAFTA.

And the President made it very clear. He said that those 13 economists have more disagreement on things than all of the living former Presidents, Democrats and Republicans do.

Mr. KOLBE. I think that the gentleman has made an important point.

Mr. DORNAN. I will just say goodnight, it is good working with you, and let us do it again next week.

Mr. KOLBE. We thank you for your contribution.

I want to thank the gentleman for his point there, because I think you made a very important point, and that is the people you just mentioned, ranging from Jerry Brown to Pat Buchanan, all of whom oppose trade, all of whom are against free trade, have not been successful candidates for President of the United States. We need to have people out there who are in favor of free trade speaking in behalf of it. Those are the kinds of Presidential candidates that will be successful.

As my colleague pointed out, every single former living President is in favor of this, every single former living Secretary of State, every single former living Secretary of Commerce is in favor of this, 300 economists, every one of them, the Nobel Prize winning economists are in favor of it. Are they all wrong and Ross Perot is correct? I doubt it. I think there is something else, and I think the American people are beginning to understand this issue, that this really is about creating jobs, about making more opportunities or Americans to have work so that we can sell our products in other countries.

There were many issues that were raised by Ross Perot last night in his debate, but one of them I wanted to bring up at this point. He said well, people who do not make anything cannot buy anything. That is another one of these subliminal racist kind of remarks that we hear all of the time that harkens back to the old stereotypes about Mexico. The reality is that Mexico is the second-largest market today, even with the tariffs that exist it is the second-largest market for our products. It is the third-largest market for our U.S. farm products, the second-largest for our manufactured products.

They spend, as my colleague has pointed out, they spend 70 cents of every dollar that they spend overseas on U.S. products. And they spend more, and I think this is astonishing that here is an economy with a per capita income one-seventh of the United States, and roughly one-seventh of that of the EC countries, and one-seventh of that of Japan, and they spend more on a per capita basis, that is every Mexican, if you took all of the purchases from Mexico of United States products, they spend more, $450 per person per year on United States products, $450 more than the Japanese do, who are our second-largest trading partners. And they buy $385 in products. We have a chart right down there which shows that very well. And the European Community buys an even lesser amount.

Mr. DREIER. Two hundred ninety-six dollars.

Mr. KOLBE. Considerably less than does Mexico.

So here we have a good example of how Mexicans are buying today, and if we bring these tariffs down we will have more opportunities to do this.

I know we have been joined here by a couple of our colleagues, my friend from Washington, JAY INSLEE, who has just joined us, and I would like to yield to him. I just want to say that he has been a real stalwart on this battle, and it is not an easy fight that we are in right now. And I appreciate the leadership that you have shown on your side from the State of Washington.

Mr. DREIER. Will my friend yield for just a minute?

Mr. KOLBE. Yes. I know that the gentleman wants to make an introductory remark.

Mr. DREIER. All I wanted to say is that Mr. INSLEE's presence here demonstrates the fact that this is a bipartisan effort. Democrats and Republicans are working together for free trade, and breaking down barriers to expand opportunities for U.S. manufacturers to sell worldwide, and for consumers to benefit in this country.

Mr. KOLBE. I thank you, and I yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. INSLEE. I appreciate that, and I am sure you appreciate how much I appreciate being involved in this bipartisan effort. I think when you have such a bipartisan effort it shows the attraction and the benefits, the mutual benefits, and it does not happen very often around here where we have a bipartisan effort. To me it shows me that when people of different minds can be attracted to something, this is a unique situation, to have the attraction of both sides for free trade is unique.

But I just want to comment on a couple of things that have happened in the last 24 hours, and then ask you gentleman a question. To me the democratic process has truly gotten into high gear when it comes to the NAFTA debate. What I mean by that is it has been my belief if you combine the common sense of the American people with the very accurate knowledge about an issue before them, the right thing happens. And that is what started happening in high gear last night, because we have the common sense of the American people who got to see the Vice President of the United States blast away a lot of the myths about the NAFTA treaty and actually give the American people the facts. And I will tell you what has happened.

What has happened is that the polling done right away last night shown there was a 23-percent jump after listening to the Vice President talk about the facts of NAFTA. It went from I think 35 percent pro-NAFTA on those who heard the debate, who cared enough about this issue to tune into their television sets, and it went up to 57 percent in 1 hour. And we have been working for weeks and weeks, and in 1 hour, when people heard the facts, they took this giant jump.

But even more importantly, the gentleman referred to the Noble Prize winners, the economists who have been in favor of this, but I will tell you who is even more important in my analysis, is these four fellows who are in a carpool every morning driving to the Hanford Nuclear Reservation in my district. We got a call from them.

Mr. DREIER. I was going to mention them, and I forgot.

Mr. INSLEE. But they called up, and they said, "You know, we have been in this carpool now for 3 months, and every morning we are saying how do you do, what's up with the wife and kids, et cetera, and then we talk about NAFTA."

And we have had bad-mouthing of NAFTA from one end of the Fourth District to the other. You know, it is the craziest thing, we all went home the other night and we watched the debate. We learned what, in fact, is the situation with the Mexican tariffs, that their tariffs are twice as high as ours. We learned that that is going to be knocked down to zero. We found out that we are having a trade surplus with Mexico. And we found out that they buy $450 per capita of goods here. And, you know, four people got in that car this morning and said, "It is the darnest thing, we are all for NAFTA now."

It seems to me that this is democracy in high gear. Great things are happening, maybe in part because of the bipartisan effort here but also because I believe the facts got delivered.

I was just wondering, our phone calls got turned around this morning, all the way around. I just want to yield to all the gentleman here and ask was your experience the same as mine?

Mr. KOLBE. Reclaiming my time if I might, and I appreciate the gentleman's contribution because I think he makes a good point. This is democracy in action, having this debate last night. It really has focused the American people on this issue.

The calls in our district office as well as here in Washington have changed fairly dramatically and are much more in favor. As the gentleman pointed out, those supporting NAFTA went from 34 to 57 percent. That is the first time we have had a majority who have been in favor of the North American Free-Trade Agreement. Those opposed dropped not nearly as much as the increase, but dropped from 38 to 36 percent. There were some other interesting statistics that came out of that debate. None of us is going to make our decision now on the basis of a debate, but I will come back to why I think it is important. In terms of those who say NAFTA will result in more jobs, 58 percent believe it will result in more jobs and 38 percent believe it will result in less jobs. That is the first time we have been able to win on that fundamental and basic argument.

Why is that important? Because I know my friend from Washington has heard this from a lot of his colleagues as I have from ours, they say, "Gee, I know NAFTA is good, I know NAFTA is the right thing to do, I know it is good for the United States, but I just can't be for it because I have heard all these people, the Perot people who are against this thing," or, "I have been beaten up by labor unions at home and I just don't have any support." Well, there is support, and the American people are coming to support and to understand this issue. I will say to my colleagues that in order to cast this vote, it is not going to be on the basis of what is good, ultimately, for jobs for America and for their districts but on what they put their finger to the wind and what they think it is going to be. The day will come, and it will not be too long, before people will be asking, "How is it that you voted against consumer interests, how is it you voted against providing jobs in this country, how is it you voted against America's interests in Latin America?" They will have to answer for the vote that they will cast against this.

I am happy to yield to my friend from Orange County—and we have many from California who have been joining in this debate—now from Orange County, I yield to the gentleman from California [Mr. ROHRBACHER].

Mr. ROHRBACHER. Well, that is because the issue to be determined means a lot to the future of California. We are in a tremendous economic slump in California. Unemployment is near 10 percent, people are suffering, they are losing their homes, the aerospace industry is in a time of transition from the cold war to the post-cold war world. California is having a very difficult time adjusting.

NAFTA, the Free-Trade Agreement, would mean more for the benefit of our people in California and perhaps other people around the country because we are in close proximity to Mexico. A growth in the Mexican economy would mean substantial growth and job creation in California.

But what I am afraid of right now is that once the information gets out about that, that the policymakers will not be able to make the right decision because they have been intimidated. And that is something I really fear.

In my own area it is very evident that NAFTA is going to really benefit the people of southern California. In McDonnell Douglas we have a strong aerospace presence in southern California; McDonnell Douglas builds commercial airliners. In the future McDonnell Douglas will be able to sell its commercial airliners to Mexico absent a tariff. Our competitors in Europe, the European Airbus manufacturers, they will have to spend a 10- to 20-percent tariff. They will have to try to cope with that as well as compete with us. We will outcompete the pants off those people if the Free Trade Treaty goes through. That means aerospace jobs right in southern California and, I might add, in Seattle and other areas around the country, but it is more important in California because we have such a high unemployment rate.

Mr. DREIER. And because we live there.

Mr. ROHRBACHER. We live there, and I represent that area, it is important, of course.

AST computers, for example, thousands of people in Orange County work in AST computers. We make a lot of computers in California. If the Free Trade Treaty goes through, AST—and by the way, today they announced they are laying off 650 people, 650 people out of work, unable to pay their mortgage, unable to pay their bills. What a tragedy right before Christmas season, that they are going to lay these people off.

With a Free Trade Treaty, they will be able to sell their computers in Mexico while the European and Japanese competitors will have to pay a tariff, and that will give us the competitive edge. It will save the jobs of the people who are being laid off right now. It is so evident that NAFTA will help in southern California.

We have television and we have the records industry, billions of dollars into our local economy—

Mr. KOLBE. If I may reclaim my time and follow up on that point, I know the gentleman has a great deal of telecommunications industries located in his area. The Mexican telecommunications industry is going to be investing more than $5 billion in the next 4 years. Now, they expect to do most of those purchases in the United States. They have a consortium partnership with Southwestern Bell. There is going to be a tremendous market for U.S. telecommunications, whether it is optical fibers, switching gear, all the telephone equipment that is going into modernizing their industry. They have a long way to go to modernize their telephone system. There is just tremendous opportunity for us.

We turn this down, so why would not Mexico go with the Japanese, at NEC, or Siemens in Germany, and say, "Hey, are you interested in doing business with us? The Americans aren't interested in doing business."

Mr. ROHRABACHER. Those are solid manufacturing jobs that the gentleman is talking about, the very jobs that the opponents claim we have been losing overseas, manufacturing jobs will be created.

I was not even referring to those manufacturing jobs; I was referring to the jobs of all the people in the film business, in the records business, the music business, people who are tape editors and sound engineers, people who sell records and things such as that. For the first time, intellectual property rights will be protected, those intellectual property rights of American citizens will be protected in Mexico. That is a country with a vast potential market for American films and American music. For the first time that is going to be protected.

That means billions of dollars for the southern California economy. Still you have these people representing southern California, "Well, they do not know whether they are going to vote for it," and some of them say, "I am opposed to it." And when you ask them about it, what really is the reason that they are opposed to it, they give you these answers that are almost incomprehensible, almost like Ross Perot's answer last night as to how he would really change the treaty, last night in the debate.

Mr. DREIER. Study it.

Mr. ROHRABACHER. You listen to him, and what he was saying, a bunch of gobbledygook that you cannot even understand. And when you ask some of our own colleagues that, you get the same kind of answer. And I am convinced some of our colleagues in this hall, in this House, have been intimidated by Ross Perot and his people.

Last night Ross Perot finished his presentation to the American people, looking into the camera with a smirk on his face, threatening the people of this body, not telling them to do what is right, but telling them, "You do what I want you to or we are going to kick you out of your job."

This type of threat, I believe, has a deleterious effect on the free exchange of ideas and the free discussion of NAFTA here in this body.

Mr. KOLBE. I will yield further, but I want to say I think the gentleman is absolutely right. I do not think the threat that Ross Perot makes will work because in the end the people of this body, the men and women who serve in this body, will do what is right for America. And they know that what is right for America is what is in her national interest, and that is more jobs, that is more trade, that is more freedom, that is more national security that comes with the North American Free-Trade Agreement.

Mr. ROHRABACHER. One last point.

Mr. KOLBE. Yes, of course, I want to continue the dialog and we will come back.

Mr. ROHRABACHER. If the vote was going to be anonymous, if we were going to be able to do this without publicly announcing the votes, I am convinced that it would pass this body overwhelmingly. But people have been calling my office using profanity to the women members of my staff, because of my position on NAFTA. My townhall meetings were invaded and disrupted. People were threatening people, using vile language.

Mr. DREIER. Tell them about the vote that took place in one of your town meetings.

Mr. ROHRABACHER. Well, in fact one of my townhall meetings, when the Perot people invaded this town, they tried to take it over. I finally had to tell them to sit down or shut up and get out. They can express themselves, they can ask questions, but other people have to be permitted to do so. They intentionally were disrupting the communication that was going on.

Finally I took a vote. I said, "We are going to have a vote on NAFTA. We are going to have a vote and see how many people here want NAFTA." Because all I heard were voices, loud angry voices threatening me about NAFTA. It seemed like everyone in the townhall meeting was against NAFTA.

When we took the vote, the vote was about 60 to 40 in favor of NAFTA, but the other people were quiet. They were considering the issue, and when they listened to both sides, and I tried to keep my cool, just like Vice President GORE did last night, they got the word, and I have faced not only in the people in this body, but I have faced in the American people. Like the fellows in that carpool, they are going to see the truth of this argument.

Mr. KOLBE. I agree absolutely.

Madam Speaker, I am delighted to yield to my friend and colleague on the Budget Committee, the gentleman from the great State of Connecticut, the nutmeg State [Mr. SHAYS]. I have worked with the gentleman on a lot of budget issues, and I have to tell you, this is an individual who has been a real leader on budget issues, and I think has taken some very courageous stands on the North American Free-Trade Agreement, and I am happy to yield to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. SHAYS].

Mr. SHAYS. Well, Madam Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding to me.

The gentleman from California [Mr. ROHRABACHER] was talking about what is right for America. I was thinking about a meeting I had with a group that was strongly opposed to NAFTA. They said because all of them were against NAFTA, then I should be, or else I was not representing my district.

I had one man lecture me about representation, and I found out later he did not even come from my district.

I just find intriguing the kind of pressure that is being put on; but this is part of the job and it makes it very exciting.

Also the bottom line is that we are trying to do what is right for America, those who are voting against and those who are voting for it.

I think in terms of this comment of what happened on August 12, 1941, there was a large group, a majority of the American people wanted to draw in. They wanted to isolate themselves. They thought if we eliminated the draft, that maybe we would not end up in war with Germany or Japan.

The majority said to end the draft, and yet there were brave souls who decided to do what was right for America, and in a vote of 203 to 202 they continued the draft, and 4 months later Pearl Harbor was under attack.

I think in terms of this vote being something quite similar. As people realize what NAFTA is all about, they are going to be very, very supportive of it.

I have only spoken three times in these opportunities for special orders in my 7 years here. I was drawn by what the gentleman was saying and wanted just to come down and thank the gentleman for educating people, because the gentleman really stood out, I say to the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. KOLBE] before so many others.

Unfortunately, the President was focused in on his budget and did not get the American people energized, so a lot of people committed themselves to saying no on NAFTA before they really knew what it was about.

Mr. KOLBE. Just reclaiming my time for a moment, Madam Speaker, and I will yield right back to the gentleman, I think that is a very important point.

Unfortunately, we lost a lot of time in this debate while the President was negotiating side agreements. We all understand the reasons. He made a commitment during the campaign that he would get side agreements on labor and the environment.

But what happened is that it put us in neutral from January when this administration came into office until the middle of August when the side agreements were done.

During that time, while the gentleman and I were trying to get the business community and others, trade associations and so forth, who understood the importance of the trade agreement that had been signed by President Bush, the North American Free-Trade Agreement, to get them energized to work on their behalf, what we found was that they were saying, "Well, yes, we're for the trade agreement, but we don't know what the side agreements are going to do." So they held off.

During that same time, the opponents were not holding off. They were not waiting to see what the side agreements were going to be. They knew they were going to oppose this and they spent those 8 months hammering away and getting a lot of people to come out early with commitments.

We have been playing catch-up here, but I must say, in the last few days with the work that people like my friend, the gentleman from Connecticut has been doing, talking to Members, sounding them out, finding out what their concerns are, educating and convincing them, allaying the concerns that they have, we are making tremendous progress.

I am not going to stand here on the floor tonight, as some on the other side who oppose this, and claim that we now have 219 or 220 votes in favor. That is not true anymore, neither does the other side have 220 votes against it. They know that. They are only trying to do that in order to stop the continuing flow of people from the undecided column over to the favorable side.

But we are moving in the right direction. We are getting closer. We are closing in on the magic number of 218.

I know that 1 week from tonight when we have this vote on the North American Free-Trade Agreement, my colleagues will not fail to do what is right for America. We will pass the North American Free-Trade Agreement.

Madam Speaker, I am happy to yield further to my friend, the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. SHAYS. Well, I just say, I pray the gentleman is right, because I consider it such an extraordinarily important issue.

I view this as a win socially for Mexico and the United States, a win politically for both countries, a win economically, a net win economically for both countries, and even environmentally.

I wanted to speak to that, if I could.

Mr. KOLBE. I wish the gentleman would talk about some of the environmental concerns that are in here.

Mr. SHAYS. I look at this as someone who has had a 100-percent rating from League of Conservation Voters for 4 years. I am not unmindful of environmental concerns and the strong laws we have, and know that they are not compromised.

But where the logic escapes me on the other side is that somehow they say NAFTA does not cure Mexico's environmental problems, as if defeating NAFTA will.

What I see is the extraordinary economic activity and opportunity that exists for foreign countries in Mexico.

If we say no to Mexico, it seems to me our preferential opportunities there are going to then come to Japan and the other Asian and European nations. Instead of an American company on either side of the border, we will have a Japanese or German company.

How then are we going to get that German company or that Japanese company to honor American law and to respect our environmental concerns? How are we going to get those countries to care about the environment in North America?

I submit that an American company established in Mexico is going to be far more concerned about our environment.

Mr. KOLBE. I think if I might join in on this part of the debate, I think the gentleman has made an excellent point. It boils down to that one question. The status quo, we know we have got problems. I live along the border. I grew up on a ranch that is only 15 miles from the border with Mexico. I have watched through the years as the growth has taken place along there, as Maquiladores plants have been built, as there has been industrial growth along there. I have seen the problems that have come from border environmental problems, the degradation of the environment, and the fact that we have this artificial barrier of a political boundary that makes it difficult for us to work together to solve some of these problems.

How does one believe the status quo, which is that we have environmental problems, is going to be better than solving the problems cooperatively?

I think it is worth noting, Madam Speaker, what has happened in Mexico and is happening today in Mexico with regard to the environment. Mexico's environmental law, which is modeled after our own Clean Air and Clean Water Act, all sides would agree on this, I think, is a good law. Even the opponents concede it is a good law.

But they say, of course, it is not getting enforced. I would concede that enforcement in Mexico does not come up to the standards that the United States has for enforcement of environmental education. After all, it is a country with an economy a fraction the size of ours, a per capita income that is about one-seventh the size of ours, but they are spending more and more of their resources.

I might add, over 3 years time they have committed $400 million to border environmental problems. That is $400 million more than the United States has committed to the problem, even though we said we were going to do something about it.

Every time it has come to the floor of the House of Representatives in an appropriations bill, we have defeated and taken out the appropriations for border environmental problems, because we have not had the concern. Mexico is doing something about the problems along their side of the border.

Madam Speaker, I am happy to yield again to the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. SHAYS. It seems that we first care about breathing, and then we care about feeding ourselves, and we work to deal with the other concerns that we have. Mexico is a country with a tremendous amount of unemployment.

Mr. KOLBE. And we are not that many years past the Love Canal in our own country.

Mr. SHAYS. I had a Mexican say to me, "You know, you worry about what happens down there, but am I wrong, Congressman, that in a 4-day period you have 17 people murdered in your Capital? What are you doing to protect your citizens? What are you doing to help your own citizens?"

We have some things that we need to focus in on ourselves, but I just would like to make this point, if I could.

When I was working in the private sector, I had a 6-month opportunity to do a risk analysis for a Fortune 500 company in 1982, to have one of its subsidiaries go down to Mexico. At that time you had to have Mexican ownership.

The American company could only have 49-percent ownership. After looking at this and the opportunities in Mexico, I advise them not to go in, but we have seen a significant change now. You can own a company in Mexico, and the maquiladora plant, I mean that, to me, is not a good situation for the United States, but that disappears under NAFTA. You used to, in order to sell in Mexico, have to have Mexican content, and we do not have to have that today.

So, when I have someone tell me they are unemployed because of NAFTA, I say to them, "NAFTA hasn't gone into effect. You are not unemployed."

Mr. KOLBE. I had a woman come up to me the other night after debate that I did in my district who said, "Everyone in my family has lost their jobs because of NAFTA."

I said, "Excuse me. We are about to vote on it. We haven't done NAFTA yet."

But I think it is again one of the fears and the misconceptions that we have here.

If I might, I will just yield to the gentleman from California [Mr. ROHRABACHER].

Mr. ROHRABACHER. Well, I think the gentleman is making a really significant point. I hope people are not missing this.

I ask, "How many times have you listened to a speech about NAFTA and heard all of the horrible things that are going on?"

Ross Perot did it last night, the environment, how horrible it is down there, the working conditions for the people down there, how horrible it is down there in Mexico.

I mean it's over and over and over again we hear about the horrors in Mexico.

Mr. DREIER. Does the gentleman mean to tell me NAFTA is not responsible for that?

Mr. ROHRABACHER. My goodness.

Mr. DREIER. We have not had NAFTA for years?

Mr. ROHRABACHER. We are debating about whether there will be a NAFTA, and I think the Vice President's greatest point was: How are we going to make that better?

That is what NAFTA is all about.

As my colleagues know, I am a surfer from California, that is what I have done, and I will tell my colleagues when we talk about environment down in Mexico—

Mr. DREIER. And a darn good one at that.

Mr. ROHRABACHER. I am the best surfer in Congress, the only surfer in Congress, but the best surfer.

Mr. DREIER. Not necessarily the only one.

Mr. ROHRABACHER. But I used to go down to Mexico, and there was a problem that we knew about, the pollution into the ocean in Mexico because Mexico did not treat the sewage that was being dumped into the ocean, and it would cause sickness among surfers and other people who went into the water there.

Well, why did Mexico do that? Mexico did that because it was a poor country. They did not have the money to actually build the treatment plants, and, when the Mexican economy goes up, and they start putting money into protecting their environment, which is what countries do when they have more wealth, when they get over the situation where the workers cannot even pay for their family homes and things like that, when they get beyond that stage they will be investing in this environmental technology.

No. 1, it will make the environment better; but, No. 2, who is going to sell them the environmental technology? It is going to come from the United States. It is going to come from workers in our country who produce the machines that will help improve the economy in Mexico.

This is a system that works on itself, a better economy, a better environment, better jobs on both sides of the border.

Mr. KOLBE. Madam Speaker, I appreciate the gentleman's comments, and I think he said it as succinctly as it possibly can be said, and that is that we cannot have improved environmental conditions unless: First, we have improvement in the economy in Mexico; and second, we have a cooperative spirit. We are talking about border problems, cooperation between the United States and Mexico.

The cooperation that is going on right now is absolutely fantastic. I do not know if the gentleman knows, but Mexico City is the only country in the world where we have an EPA person in the embassy. We actually have two of them now in our embassy down there. They are hungering for the technical advice that we can give them on auto emissions, on how to solve their problems, and when people tell me that the Mexicans do not care about the environment, I ask them to go to Mexico City. It is a very polluted city, and every one of them, they know that.

For one thing it is at 6,000 feet. Less oxygen makes it very much more difficult to solve the problem than we have even in the Los Angeles Basin. But every one of the media leaders, the public opinion leaders, the politicians, the business leaders in Mexico, lives in Mexico City.

And I heard it so well from President Salinas when he said, "When my daughter comes home from school," and he is a very young President, and he has got very young children; he says, "When my daughter comes home from school and she brings me a picture of what her dream of Mexico is, and that is to have a sky with stars in it at night, which she says, 'I have never seen in Mexico City,'" he says, "how can I not be affected and moved by that?" He says, "I go to schools, and the only thing I ever get from children, is: 'What are you going to do to clean up the environment?'"

Well, a Mexican politician is no different than a politician in this country. They need to be able to respond to those concerns, and they are responding. They are responding with good laws, and they are responding with good enforcement.

Mr. ROHRABACHER. But they have got to have the resources.

Mr. KOLBE. Exactly.

Mr. ROHRABACHER. And to so many people that fear an expanding economy in Mexico—in fact Ross Perot would rather have us condemn Mexico to what it used to be 20 years ago rather than seeing a growing economy because he is actually, when they call him a fearmonger, I think that was a very good expression by the Vice President. He wants us to be afraid of an expanding economy in Mexico.

Mr. SHAYS. And a solution was to actually raise the tariff, and he said, "As their economy improves, then we can lower it."

How in the world is their economy going to improve when we raise our tariffs?

Mr. KOLBE. Well, that of course was the Smoot-Hawley approach back in the 1930's, and it did not work there.

Madam Speaker, my time is about to expire here, and, as we end this part of the debate, at least I think my colleagues will be able to continue this, and I will join them in that. I just want to say that I believe that this debate that we are having, and this discussion, I think, is absolutely critical if the American people are going to understand the issues that are involved here and if our colleagues in Congress are going to understand and cast an intelligent vote.

I want to thank my colleagues for joining in on this debate.

FURTHER MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A further message from the Senate by Mr. Hallen, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate agrees to the Report of the Committee of Conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 3116) "An act making appropriations for the Department of Defense for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1994, and for other purposes."

NAFTA

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from California [Mr. DREIER] is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mr. DREIER. Madam Speaker, I would like to continue the discussion that we have going on with our colleagues here, and I would like to focus on a couple of points that have not been made. I would like to begin by referring to the support that exists in this country for the North American Free-Trade Agreement.

Now we have talked about the fact that all 13 living former Nobel prize winning economists, Milton Friedman, Paul Samuelson, right down the line strongly support the NAFTA, and Paul Samuelson indicated that those who oppose the NAFTA have tried desperately to find a Nobel Prize winning economist who opposed the North American Free-Trade Agreement, and they could not do it.

Now we have all sort of questioned the economists in the past. In fact, our Labor Secretary has said, "An economist is one who doesn't have the personality to be an accountant." But it seems to me that we need to look at the other base of support.

That is one that ROHRABACHER is going to write down I see. It seems to me that the gentleman can attribute that to Robert Reich, Secretary of Labor.

It seems to me that we need to look at the other support that there exists in this country for the North American Free-Trade Agreement. Now I know that my friend, the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. KOLBE], and I have had the privilege of sitting in the East Room of the White House when former President Bush, former President Carter, and former President Ford joined with President Clinton to support the North American Free-Trade Agreement. In the speech that was delivered by President Clinton he said that, as a former Governor, he knows that every single Governor wakes up every morning and faces their No. 1 priority, and I know that my friends are well aware of exactly what that priority is. It is to create jobs in the State that they govern.

Now, Madam Speaker, of the 50 Governors there are 2 Governors who have come out in opposition to the North American Free-Trade Agreement. Those two Governors happen to be Gov. James Florio of New Jersey and Gov. Doug Wilder of Virginia. Those are the only two Governors who have come out in opposition to the North American Free-Trade Agreement, and, as we all know, Governor Florio was defeated, and Governor Wilder's term has expired.

Mr. DREIER. Madam Speaker, let me say that if we look at the 50 Governors, I mentioned the two who had been strong opponents. One was defeated and the other's term expired. If you look at the support base that exists out there, there are 41 Governors who strongly support the North American Free-Trade Agreement. They do so because they know that it is going to create jobs in their States, creating opportunities for exporting products manufactured in their States. That is why I have been so hard pressed to understand how our colleagues here, who are to be the representatives of the people, and I know my friend from Connecticut has referred to the fact he was lectured on representative government, how our colleagues can be Representatives and not realize, as the Governors who are daily on the front line, trying to create jobs for the people whom they represent, how they could possibly oppose the North American Free-Trade Agreement.

I know my friend has talked about representative government, and I have always thought that the quote that was delivered in 1794 by the father of conservatism, a former member of Parliament in Great Britain, Edmund Burke, really hit the nail on the head. And I think the vote we will face here is probably more akin to that statement of Edmund Burke than almost anything.

Burke said, "Your representative owes you. Not his industry only, but his judgment as well. And he betrays, rather than serves, if he sacrifices it to your opinion."

This basically means that if we as Members of Congress are simply weather vane, at the whim of a few constituents, remembering that we each represent about 600,000 people, if that one person talking there has said you have to do what I and the six people I have in this room want or you are not representing us, as your job states, then that would really be an abrogation of my friend's responsibility as a representative from the State of Connecticut. And I congratulate him for understanding what representative government is all about.

I am happy to yield to my friend from Newport Beach.

Mr. ROHRABACHER. You know, it is not just the primary responsibility of Governors to look out for jobs. That is what this Congress is supposed to be all about, because we realize we are not going to bring down the deficit, we are not going to be able to solve some of the social problems that plague our country, unless we maximize the number of real jobs that are available in our society.

Jobs are a great social program. I think that perhaps one of the reasons people have a wrong idea about what this NAFTA will do about jobs is because they have been fooled with maybe some of the charts that Ross Perot has been showing for the last 6 months.

Now, last night when Ross Perot was debating the Vice President, I do not know if you noticed when he very quickly showed the pie chart about what United States exports are to Mexico. He said, "You see, only 17 percent of those exports really count, only 17 percent, because those are the only exports that reflect a consumer in Mexico buying an item that was manufactured in the United States."

Seventeen percent. In other words, all of the aerospace workers who work in my district who produce airplanes and sell them around the world, their jobs don't count. The export market of American aircraft overseas, according to Ross Perot, to hell with their jobs, they do not count on the export-plus for the United States. They do not make it on his pie chart because that is not a consumer item that is purchased by a consumer in some other country. Well, that is how our people are employed in southern California.

By the way, the people at Caterpillar Tractor, they are selling thousands of Caterpillar tractors to help Mexico build their roads. Of course, their jobs do not count either under Ross Perot's analysis because that is not a consumer buying a Caterpillar tractor.

Mr. KOLBE. If the gentleman will yield, I was down in Hermosillo a few months ago, which is the capital of the state directly to the south of me. I went to a place where they were building the first luxury golf course and country club in Hermosillo, a sign, in and of itself, of the growing prosperity of that part of northern Mexico, that they are now building this country club with fairway lots that are going to sell for $75,000 or $100,000, not a bad price by Mexican standards.

They were building this golf course. It was an 18-hole golf course, and they were going to add another 9, so it was going to be a 27-hole golf course. They were trying to build the entire 27 holes in 11 months time.

I ask them, because there was a sea of Caterpillar equipment running all over the place. Earth movers, graders, bulldozers.

I said, "How many pieces do you have here?" They said, "We have more than 100 pieces on this job down here."

Now, this is Peter Cuett, one of the largest contractors in the world, and this was their first job in Mexico. So they had all their top executives on this job, because they were watching to see how it went in Mexico. I said, "What are you going to do with that equipment when you are finished?" He said, "We are moving on to other jobs here in Mexico and we are going to bring more equipment down here in order to do those jobs."

Folks in Peoria and Decatur, IL are making that equipment. To be exact, the year before last, $360 million were sold by Caterpillar in Mexico alone. Exactly $360 million.

Mr. DREIER. If I may reclaim my time on that specific point, last Saturday afternoon I, in Mexico City, went, and my friend from Tucson referred to this earlier, to the Telmex operation in Mexico City.

Now, we know that in this House there are people from Ohio, Michigan, and Pennsylvania, who have harshly attacked the NAFTA, saying it is going to create this flow of jobs to Mexico.

When I went into Telmex and looked at equipment, some of which is still running today and has been in operation since 1929, they have not updated telephone equipment in some parts since 1929. I moved around the switching operation there are Telmex. And I was so struck when my friends mentioned Caterpillar. The energy source for Telmex is a huge Caterpillar generator that is inside, right there in the interior of this operation there.

Now, the other thing that struck me as I looked at other equipment in there, I wanted to go up and look at the labels, its place of origin.

One of the most virulent opponents to the NAFTA is a freshman Member of ours from Lorain, OH. There is a huge operation that produces energy sources, power sources, made in Lorain. And I know that many of those jobs in Lorain moved to Mexico. There is in fact a Lorain de Mexico operation which has shifted from Lorain, OH to Mexico.

I talked to the people about this. They explained, "Of course, if we had a free-trade agreement, it would not have been necessary to see the movement from Ohio to Mexico that provides this equipment for Telmex."

If you look at the tariff barrier that exists, ranging from 10 to as high as 20 percent on computers, and that tariff barrier forced operations in Lorain, OH, to move and establish Lorain de Mexico so they could produce cost effectively those items for the new Telmex operation power sources.

I was also struck with other equipment I found there from Gaithersburg, MD, and, of course, from Peoria, IL. Many of these items are there today, but many of them have been produced by Mexican workers. Not because of cheap labor, but because of the tariff structure that exists, that prevents United States-manufactured items from getting into Mexico. Of course, bringing down these barriers is going to greatly enhance our opportunity to do that. And we have got to remember, many of these items are produced in Germany and Japan, and these tariff barriers that exist on computers, computer chips, and other things, remains. I know my friend mentioned earlier IBM.

The fact of the matter is the tariff on computer systems, this is a low of 10 percent. It is as high as 20 percent. The chief executive officer of IBM has said, if the NAFTA is passed, there will not be the necessity to move operations in our State of California from California to Mexico. Why? Because the tariff barrier which is so high, 10 to 20 percent, will come down to zero, being totally eliminated. But if the North American Free Trade Agreement is defeated, the IBM operations will have virtually no choice whatsoever other than to move to Mexico for their operations.

But remember, the Japanese and the Germans will still have to overcome these great hurdles that are there.

Madam Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. SHAYS].

Mr. SHAYS. Madam Speaker, I have been so intrigued by these charts and just the logic of a barrier that is eliminated makes it so much easier for Americans to sell in Mexico. I view the NAFTA as right for Mexico, clearly, for the United States, and clearly for my own State of Connecticut. I mean, we are seeing our only hope is exports, as our defense contracts are closing in and being reduced.

What I am seeing that is so exciting is the companies that exist in my State, the Xeroxes, the IBM's, and the others, they are able now to be far more competitive overseas. And without these barriers, what we sell in Mexico, our ability to compete more favorably than the European nations in Mexico and the Asian Rim nations, to me is such a clear win.

I know my colleague said he expects NAFTA will pass. I get on my knees, figuratively, and hope that both of you are able to persuade your colleagues. I know you have worked so hard. I am going to be taking a plane home back to my district, but this is the third time I have come, as I said earlier, to this kind of opportunity.

I just feel what you both are doing, and others, is so important and just want to thank you. Hopefully, we will be able to look the American people in the eye and say it passed. We did the right thing for the United States. We did the right thing for Mexico, and we are going to see some very good results.

Mr. DREIER. I thank my friend for his contribution. I have one message that I would like to deliver to him, as he prepares to head to Connecticut. There are a few of our colleagues who have not seen the light on this issue, as my friend has. And I hope very much that as he heads home that he will be able to prevail on some of our colleagues in Connecticut to use the same incredibly incisive reason and logic which he so often brings regularly to the floor of this Congress in letting those people know that we are going to break down barriers and expand employment opportunities for the people of Connecticut.

Mr. SHAYS. There are three Congressmen who intend to vote for NAFTA now and three who are choosing not to. But both our Senators, Senator DODD and Senator LIEBERMAN, have looked at both sides of this issue and have had a lot of pressure on both sides and are strongly in support of it. And I am obviously working with them to articulate, with our three colleagues, that their vote is extraordinarily important.

Just as that debate in 1941, to renew the draft, that some thought was not the popular vote but was the right vote, and 4 months later we learned why, I hope that they will recognize that people will look back on this day next week and say, who came up to the plate and who was willing to take the hit that made a difference in this world.

Mr. KOLBE. Madam Speaker, if the gentleman will continue to yield, before the gentleman from Connecticut leaves, I would just like to say that I appreciate the thoughtfulness of his remarks. I want to reiterate what I said earlier, and that is, these are not remarks said just to flatter the gentleman from Connecticut, but his very quiet and thoughtful support on this issue, I think, has meant a great deal to a number of our colleagues.

You have been an individual that has shown through the years a lot of concern about environmental issues. You have shown a lot of concern about economic issues. You come from a district that has some very tough economic times, I know, as many of my friends from California have suffered with that now. And we did it just a few years ago in Arizona. But you have thought through these issues.

I would say that the thoughtful approach you have brought to this, I think, has been very instrumental with some of our colleagues in helping persuade them to be for this. We thank you for what you have done.

Madam Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding further. I was wondering if it might be possible for us to proceed to a slightly different issue and one that I think the three of us, coming from this side of the aisle, need to talk about with some of our colleagues. And that is the issue that has been suggested by some that this agreement represents a significant threat to U.S. sovereignty, that somehow we are going to lose, the United States is going to give away its sovereignty.

I think that is an absolutely bogus issue and one that has been raised by many people, including former Presidential candidate Pat Buchanan.

I am looking here, and I know my colleagues have seen this, a policy analysis that has been done by the Cato Institute. The Cato Institute, as my friends know, is probably the most libertarian think tank that exists here in Washington. It is one that does not believe in Government regulation at all, and so I would have to say that they have a lot of concerns about the North American Free-Trade Agreement.

It is certainly not, as my friends would acknowledge, a pure free-trade agreement. If it was a pure free-trade agreement, we could do it all in one sentence. But it does move us in the direction toward freer trade.

But on the issue of sovereignty, I would just read two sentences that come from the executive summary of the Cato policy analysis, by Jerry Taylor, which is entitled, "NAFTA's Green Accords, Sounds and Fury Signifying Little." And they said this, when talking about the concern that there will be huge international bureaucracies that have the power to impose a new green policy agenda on the signatories to the agreement.

They said this:

Indeed, no reasonable reading of the treaty warrants the concerns expressed by conservative anti-NAFTA critics. Although some of the NAFTA's environmental language is, in fact, vague and full of potential mischief, the clauses at issue are hermetically sealed within a wall of qualifications, exceptions, loopholes, and countermanding language.

In other words, the argument that somehow the United States is going to give away its sovereignty is, I think, absolutely refutable by this report, which goes on at some length.

For example, Pat Buchanan has said, pass NAFTA and you lose forever your opportunity to roll back Big Government. That is, we will never be able to reduce environmental regulations in this country.

And yet, if you read through this agreement and the side agreements and the implementing legislation, there is nothing at all which would suggest that that is the case, that we are going to lose our ability to do this.

All the agreement says that the United States and Canada and Mexico will make a good faith effort to enforce its laws, whatever they are. And if we do not enforce our laws, if there is a pattern, and it is very explicit on that, a pattern of nonenforcement that gives one country a trade advantage, then indeed, there can be a claim brought against that country.

Now, what is the bottom line, if you go through all these hoops that Cato talks about, all these rigorous barriers that you have that is completely encompassed by all these various things that you have to go through before you can prove that there is a pattern of nonenforcement, what happens at the end if you have gone through all that. You have had the Commission. You have gone through an appeal. You have had a fine. You have not paid it. What is the bottom line. What is the worst that can happen?

You return to the tariffs that exist today.

Mr. DREIER. The ones right here on our chart. That is the greatest penalty that people will suffer in that particular sector. Not for everything, but for that particular sector.

Mr. ROHRBACHER. Let us note that in the Cato Institute, as you say, which is a libertarian think tank, if there was any possibility that you would have government authority of another government on the people of the United States, they would be the first ones to squawk. They would be the first ones to highlight that, because they do not even like government authority of their own government over them. And the fact is that if I, and I am sure this is true of the three of us, I am sure it is true of everyone in this Hall who supports NAFTA, if we did not think this was the best deal for the United States of America, we, sure, we think that as neighbors our welfare is tied to Mexico, a growing prosperous Mexico, but we are not for this treaty simply because it is going to help Mexico. If this was not the best deal for the United States, the best deal for the people of our own areas even, we would not be supporting it.

And the fact is that taking away the right of our people or even diminishing the right of our people to control their own destinies, by one iota, would never make up for a multitude of enrichment in terms of the material side.

We as Americans, the love of liberty is what ties us together. It is not just the struggle to obtain material well-being. It is the love of freedom that brought people here to the United States of America, and the right for us to control our own destinies.

The fact is that this treaty, by providing economic well being for the people of Mexico, will also provide jobs and an economic upsurge for people in the United States. At the same time, by having a more prosperous country, we make our country a freer country.

I worked with Pat Buchanan. I worked at the White House. I heard him last night on "Night Line." He was asked for specifics of what he thought was in some way a threat to national sovereignty. I am afraid to say that he acted exactly like Ross Perot acted earlier with AL GORE. He tried to ease around the subject. He never gave specifics.

I am a patriot. I worked for Ronald Reagan. I worked in the Reagan White House with Pat Buchanan. Ronald Reagan would never concede anything of American sovereignty. Ronald Reagan is solidly behind this agreement. I am solidly behind this agreement. Conservatives who are exceptionally patriotic are behind this agreement.

I think, again, this is just another example of fear-mongering, of trying to basically play to people's fears and anxieties, rather than giving them something of substance.

Mr. DREIER. My friend is absolutely right. I think it is important for us to recognize that we saw two debates last night. We saw Ross Perot debate Democrat Vice President AL GORE. We saw Pat Buchanan debate Democrat Labor Secretary Robert Reich.

Next Monday, the debate of all debates will take place, and I hope that the American people will focus as much attention on those as they did on "Larry King Live" and "Night Line," when we see Pat Buchanan debate one of the great leaders of our party, the former Secretary of Housing and Urban Development and former Member of the U.S. House of Representatives, Jack Kemp.

We had the privilege of having lunch with Mr. Kemp today. He talked about the fact that we are going to be seeing this debate. He talked about the need for economic growth in the United States and Mexico, and breaking down barriers. I think that debate next Monday night, which will take place, and I do not know which medium we will see that on, but I know it will be carried on some forum, probably C-SPAN or one of the others.

Mr. ROHRBACHER. If the gentleman will continue to yield, as my colleague pointed out, the words that could possibly happen, as your charts point out, if there is some sort of situation where, you know, the system that is set up to determine if there has been some violation of the treaty, should a decision be made that we think is to our detriment, the worst detriment that could possibly happen would be that in that specific area the tariffs would go up to exactly the level that they are already, so it could not possibly be a detriment beyond what we already have today.

No. 2, however, let us not forget this. If this treaty is some way a detriment to the national security or national sovereignty or economic well-being of our country, of our people, we just give 6 months' notice and we are out of it. That is totally up to us. Nobody can force us to stay in this agreement unless it is to our betterment to be there, and we decide ourselves whether to stay in it.

What could be better, if you go out to buy an automobile and somebody says, "Look, I am going to let you try it out and you can buy this automobile, but look, you can get out of the deal. Just give me a little notice and you can get out of the deal." My goodness, anybody would take that buy.

This is a really good buy for us, because we can get out of it if it is not good for us.

Mr. DREIER. Let me just take 1 second, and I am happy to further yield to my friend. One of the things that has concerned me greatly is that there are more than a few Members of this House who like to engage in Japan bashing. I am not one of them. I happen to believe we should bash countries that do not have free markets, that do not have political pluralism, that have repressive human rights violations. Those are the countries we should be criticizing. We should not be criticizing countries that have free markets and political pluralism and enhanced human rights and all.

It seems to me that as we look at the history of this, if we take the Second World War and realize what has taken place since that time, we often hear people say, "Who actually won the war? Look at how well the Japanese have done over us, and we actually won the war." What really has happened is, the people in this House who regularly engage in Japan bashing bash them for one very simple and basic reason: The Japanese will not allow us to gain access to their markets.

What has happened is, we constantly see that line coming forth here in the well of this House on a regular basis. We allow Japan to develop, to grow economically to an economic super power past the Second World War, and we allowed and encouraged that development without insisting that they break down their barriers.

What has happened with Mexico? We see Mexico's economy moving, emerging, the 13th largest economy on the face of the Earth, our second largest trading partner.

What is it that we are doing? We are seeing the Mexican Government and business leaders there voluntarily taking down a tax, a tariff, a barrier which is two and one-half times greater than the barrier that we have, enhancing the opportunity for us to get into their market. The reason we criticized Japan is that they will not allow us access to their markets. The framework agreements which have been put together between the Clinton administration and the Japanese Government are a good first step, but the barriers are still there. There are tariff and non-tariff barriers. The Mexican people desperately want United States manufactured goods.

I talked about my experience Sunday morning going to the largest Wal-Mart store in the world. In that store 55 percent of the products there are made in the United States. Consumers there came up to me and said, "Please get us more U.S.-manufactured goods." As we looked around and saw items there from Taiwan, Singapore, China, and Japan, we had to remember that the barrier that exists today for us comes down, but that barrier stays up for those goods coming from other parts of the world, enhancing the opportunity to see that 55 percent of United States goods in the Wal-Mart and other department stores there in Mexico, see that figure go up, and even more United States-manufactured goods arrive.

Mr. ROHRBACHER. If the gentleman will continue to yield, I have a few more observations. What the gentleman's observation was about the Japanese, I think it is significant. There is something there about the difference between our relationship with Japan and our relationship with Mexico.

I come from California, and we Californians, of course all of us are from the Southwest, and there is a special relationship between Mexico and the United States. We feel that, because we know that our part of the United States used to be part of Mexico. We have so many citizens who are of Mexican descent. They are such an important part of our society, and we are proud of our heritage. Mexicans, they do not want to be just our neighbors, they want to be our friends. They literally want to be our friends.

Perhaps the Japanese, when we are talking about trading agreements with the Japanese, yes, they believe in equality, in trying to have some mutual benefit, but it is not done in the same kind of spirit of friendship and understanding. The Mexicans understand well that they will always be the neighbors of the United States of America.

I think it is about time, when we look at this debate, that we keep that in mind. No matter what happens, they are always going to be our neighbors. They are always going to be next door.

Whether or not they are going to be friends, whether or not the type of friendship that we have is going to be something that we can be proud of, and whether we can march together into the future, that is what we are going to make of that neighborliness.

They are always going to be there. This is perhaps something that I tried to tell the people in this Hall, because I am very aware of that. They take all the good things that are happening in Mexico for granted right now. If this treaty goes down, this is the first administration that I have seen in Mexico in my lifetime where we did not have a government being run by someone who is viciously anti-American, because they would play on the fears, just like some of our people here are playing on our fears of potential change with Mexico, they played on the fears of their people. They covered up their own corruption and incompetence by trying to stir up fear and hatred of the United States of America.

This group that is in there now, President Salinas, who is such an honorable man, who has done so much to reform that country—

Mr. KOLBE. And a real supply sider.

Mr. ROHRBACHER. And a real supply sider, who is proving it, by the way, by cutting his taxes and balancing the budget at the same time, but this man, he will not be in power. His group that is trying to reform Mexico, if we slap them in the face, we are slapping the people of Mexico in the face. We are slapping in the face people who want to be our friends and are reaching out, and what would that do, if you slapped your neighbor in the face? What kind of relationships would you have, no matter what you do from that moment on? They would remember that for the rest of their lives.

We have a chance now to chart a course, a course of friendship that will last our entire lives and the lives of our children, and benefit children on both sides of the border.

However, if instead of us reaching out and grabbing that hand in friendship and grasping that hand in a clasp and saying, "We are your neighbors, we are your friends, we mean to go through all of this together," if we instead turned it into a fist or turned the back of our hand into the face of our neighbors, there will be a price to pay. People who hate the United States will come back into power. Chaos could reign. People who do not believe in democracy, do not believe in our ideals, could come back into power.

The immigration problem we face now in California and in the southwest would be overwhelming. And that is the worst case scenario. Another scenario is Mexico could turn to Japan and some of our competitors while our economy went down. Our competitors like the Japanese, who are not our friends but our trading partners, would prosper and our people would lose jobs.

I am so committed to this, and I want to thank both of you. I have not provided leadership on this. I have been a part of the battle. But you two have been providing the leadership in this fight that I believe will chart the future of our country, and the people who live in my district, my congressional district, they will have jobs, and their children will be able to have jobs, and be able to own homes, and our standard of living will improve because of the decision we make today, and because you fellows have provided such incredible leadership to give us a fighting chance.

Mr. DREIER. I thank my friend for his very kind remarks. But I should say that in the area of leadership my friend has been working diligently to encourage many of our colleagues to join in support of this effort. And it cannot be done alone. When you are dealing with 435 senior class presidents, you have little choice other than to work diligently and to reason with them and to talk about the necessity to bring this about. And my friend has been a leader in this effort.

Mr. ROHRBACHER. As they say in Mexico, I say to you both tonight, el gusto es mio. The pleasure is mine.

Mr. DREIER. And I thank my friend.

Mr. KOLBE. If the gentleman will yield on that point just a moment, I would certainly agree with my friend from California that the gentleman from Orange County has been a real leader. Every day he comes up to me and says give me more assignments, more people that we can go and talk to, and who else can we talk to. And we really appreciate what the gentleman has been doing.

Mr. DREIER. And he has been collecting names from both my friend from Tucson and me, so he has been working double in this effort.

Tomorrow is Veterans Day, and many of us are going to be in our States celebrating, marking Veterans Day celebrations, and when we think about the fact that there are people throughout the history of this country who have fought, given their lives, their fortunes, their sacred honor to ensure that this country will succeed, you know it is amazing having made the sacrifice that they have, and none has lost his sacred honor, but many have lost their fortunes, their lives for this great experiment known as the United States of America, and as we mark Veterans Day tomorrow it seems to me that we really are a turning point. A week from today we will cast what I know my friend and I believe is the most important vote of what will be the last decade of the millenium, and as we prepare to head into the 21st century, the sacrifice that so many Americans have given for the cause of freedom, democratic expansion, free markets, political pluralism, self-determination and all of the things that were used as a basis for the establishment of the United States of America will be determined. Why? Because one week from today when we face that vote it will probably be around this time, some time in the early evening, I would suspect next Wednesday. We will be making the determination as to whether or not those veterans who we honor tomorrow on Veterans Day will have struggled in vain for the cause of freedom, or whether that cause will continue to proceed.

I am happy to yield to my friend from Tucson.

Mr. KOLBE. I appreciate the comments the gentleman just made, because I think you have brought us back here as we come to the conclusion of this discussion tonight as to what the real issue is here. And that is will we act in the interest of America, will we act in the interest of what is good for the world and for our national interest. And I believe that Members of this body will do that, because they are good, and they are honorable men and women, and they want to do what is right for America.

I like to think that sometimes the reward for doing the right thing is the reward, the doing of the right thing itself, and the reward will be found in doing that. And I can think back to a couple of very tough votes that I have cast, a couple of them where I have gone against my President, or gone against the overwhelming majority of my caucus because I believed, my conscience told me it was the right thing to do. And I worried politically at the time that I cast that vote whether I would suffer from that, what kind of consequences would flow from going against the President or going against my caucus. But I have found that by and large the fallout from that has not been great, because when you do the right thing, and what people know you believe to be the right thing, and not because you are doing it because you think it is the politically expedient thing to do for the moment, they will trust your judgment on that. And I believe that the American people will trust the judgment of those of us here in this body as we make this historic decision, because they know that the decision that we will make will be one that is for the interest of the country.

I can only believe that the interests of this country are in expanding our markets, in expanding our opportunities to export, in expanding the opportunities for jobs here in America as we produce goods that can be sold in other countries.

As I said at the beginning of my remarks, now almost 2 hours ago, we live in a world that is very different from the world that most of us were born into at the end of the war or sometime around that time. We live in a world in which the United States must truly compete for its place in the world, where we must earn our way by being a better producer, and American manufacturers, American workers are better producers. We have won that struggle. We have won it not without a lot of pain, and not without a lot of difficulty. But the fact of the matter is today when you look at the other countries in the world, when you look at Germany, and when you look at Japan, the United States is in a better position today than any of those countries, because we have gone through the restructuring, we have made the decisions about investment, we have made the decisions to change the way we do business in this country, and our businesses are more competitive than ever.

We have the ability today to compete in industry after industry, and our products are better. Look at our automobile industry, which only a few years ago was being derided as being bad producers, as being high-cost and low-quality producers. Today, American cars are the envy of people all over the world, and our export market has grown from a tiny amount to over half a million. That is double in the last 3 years in the U.S. export market in automobiles, and that is because of our price, and that is because of our quality.

I know that Americans have confidence in the future of this country. They do not want our colleagues, they do not want the Members of this Congress to say we do not believe in America, we do not believe that Americans can compete in this world. We look forward to the future, and I know my friend from California does. And he has been a leader in making that happen.

We look forward to the future, and we know that Americans can compete. I want to thank the gentleman for participating in this discussion tonight. I think it has been a very useful discussion.

Mr. DREIER. Madam Speaker, I thank my friend for his very helpful contribution and his typical eloquence. I will now place him, having listened to that speech that he just delivered in the eye column. He will be voting I suspect in favor of the North American Free-Trade Agreement. As votes are being counted, I think it is going to be a very fascinating week. Wednesday it really started with the debate that took place last night, and we will see a wide range of discussions that take place here on the floor of the Congress, in the newspapers, on television, and radio over the next week. And I am convinced that a week from tonight we will have what will be a narrow victory, but it will be a victory for the cause of freedom, and the cause of breaking down barriers and expanding opportunities for Americans.

Mr. KOLBE. If the gentleman will yield, something you just said made me think of something as we talk about going into this final week. When we finish this discussion here tonight, we leave for 4 days. Tomorrow, as you say, is Veterans Day, and Members will be home over the next 4 days.

This is a wonderful opportunity for Americans to make their views known to our colleagues, to let them know how they feel about American opportunities, how they feel about America's role in the world, and to let their representatives know whether they are for or against the North American Free-Trade Agreement, to let their representatives know their views on this.

Our colleagues have gone home, and I know many of them expect to hear from their constituents, from the people that they represent, and I hope those who might be listening to this will feel a reason to want to call their Representative and let them know how they feel about this issue.

Mr. DREIER. My friend is absolutely right. I assume the gentleman is going to be in Arizona tomorrow as I will be in California tomorrow, and we will be hearing from our constituents as we have on this issue for a long period of time. But I am convinced that with strong support, people like the gentleman from Tucson and others who have been working diligently on this, that the American people will score a great victory for the United States of America 1 week from today.

H.R. 3464, THE ARSON DETERRENCE AND WILDFIRE CONTAINMENT ACT

(Mr. DREIER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DREIER. I would like to take just 1 minute to talk about an issue of great concern to my State of California. We all saw the tremendous fires that took place in southern California a couple of weeks ago and have still been burning.

Fortunately, we only lost three lives, but thousands and thousands of acres were burned, and many homes.

I happen to represent an area that was particularly hard hit, the hills in Pasadena, Kinoloa Mesa, Sierra Madre Villa, Pasadena Glen, we lost over 100 homes. It has been a great tragedy.

So Monday evening I introduced legislation, H.R. 3464, which is designed to get at the root of this problem. There have been some tremendous heroes in this struggle against the fires in southern California. And the discussions that I and the members of my staff have had with literally dozens of people in the U.S. Forest Service, in law enforcement, the fire fighters, a wide range of victims, we have worked, the people in our office, day and night to put together H.R. 3464. This legislation would enact strong new penalties on arsonists, including punishment for those who allow fires to start through their reckless actions.

The act also would improve our ability to fight and contain fires in the future. It modernizes our airborne fire-fighting units, converts more military planes toward private fire fighting contracting and improves fire fighting response time. It also studies ways to increase our fire fighting response time. It also studies ways to increase our fire fighting infrastructure and eliminates legal impediments which prevent people from clearing out flammable dry brush and weeds on their property. Specifically, that was the Endangered Species Act, which I believe needs to be addressed.

We cannot afford another destructive fire like those we have suffered in California. I urge my colleagues from California in cosponsoring H.R. 3464.

(1) an estimate of the operational readiness rate that can be achieved with the planned level of spares, maintenance manpower, and logistics support;

(ii) an estimate of the additional amounts of spares, maintenance manpower, and logistics support and the added costs thereof, to achieve the planned operational readiness rate; and

(2) The Extended Range Interceptor (ERINT) missile program.

SEC. 234. COMPLIANCE OF BALLISTIC MISSILE DEFENSE SYSTEMS AND COMPONENTS WITH ABM TREATY.

(a) FINDINGS.—Congress makes the following findings:

(1) Section 232(a)(1) of the Missile Defense Act of 1991 (10 U.S.C. 2431 note) establishes a goal for the United States to comply with the ABM Treaty (including any protocol or amendment thereto) and not develop, test, or deploy any ballistic missile defense system, or component thereof, in violation of that treaty (as modified by any protocol or amendment thereto) while deploying an anti-ballistic missile system capable of providing a highly effective defense of the United States against limited attacks of ballistic missiles.

(2) The Department of Defense has conducted no formal compliance review of any of the components or systems scheduled for early deployment as part of either the Theater Missile Defense Initiative or the initial limited defense system to be located at Grand Forks, North Dakota.

(3) The Department of Defense is continuing to obligate hundreds of millions of dollars for the development and testing of systems or components of ballistic missile defense systems before a determination has been made that, if successfully developed, tested, or deployed, those systems and components would be in compliance with the ABM Treaty.

(4) The President requested the authorization and appropriation of additional funds for continued development of such systems and components during fiscal year 1994.

(5) The United States and its allies face existing and expanding threats from ballistic missiles capable of being used as theater weapon systems that are presently possessed by, being developed by, or being acquired by a number of countries, including Iraq, Iran, and North Korea.

(6) Some theater ballistic missiles presently deployed or being developed (such as the Chinese-made CSS-2) have capabilities equal to or greater than the capabilities of missiles which were determined to be strategic missiles more than 20 years ago under the SALT I Interim Agreement of 1972 entered into between the United States and the Soviet Union.

(7) The ABM Treaty was not intended to, and does not, apply to or limit research, development, testing, or deployment of missile defense systems, system upgrades, or system components that are designed to counter modern theater ballistic missiles, regardless of the capabilities of such missiles, unless those systems, system upgrades, or system components are tested against or have demonstrated capabilities to counter modern strategic ballistic missiles.

(8) It is a national security priority of the United States to develop and deploy highly effective theater missile defense systems capable of countering the existing and expanding threats posed by modern theater ballistic missiles as soon as is technically possible.

(9) It is essential that the Secretary of Defense immediately undertake and complete a review for compliance with the ABM Treaty of proposed theater missile defense systems, system upgrades, and system components so as to not delay the development and deployment of such highly effective theater missile defense systems.

(b) REQUIRED COMPLIANCE REVIEW.—(1) The Secretary of Defense shall review the current baseline configuration of each system or system upgrade specified in paragraph (2), and the system components, to determine whether the development, testing, or deployment of that system or system upgrade would be in compliance with the ABM Treaty, including the interpretation of the Treaty set forth in the enclosure to the July 13, 1993, ACDA letter.

(2) The systems and system upgrades to be reviewed pursuant to paragraph (1) are the following:

(A) The Patriot Multimode Missile.

(B) The Extended Range Interceptor (ERINT).

(C) The Ground-Based Radar for theater missile defenses (GBR-T).

(D) The Theater High Altitude Area Defense interceptor missile (THAAD).

(E) The Brilliant Eyes space-based sensor system.

(F) Upgrades to the AEGIS/SPY radar system of the Navy.

(G) Upgrades to the Standard Missile-2 (SM-2) Interceptor of the Navy.

(3) If during the course of the compliance review under paragraph (1) (or any other such compliance review of a ballistic missile system or system upgrade), an issue arises that appears to indicate that a provision of the ABM Treaty may limit research, development, testing, or deployment by the United States of highly effective theater missile defense systems capable of countering modern theater ballistic missiles, the Secretary of Defense shall immediately submit to the appropriate congressional committees a report on that issue.

(c) REPORT.—(1) For each system and system upgrade specified in paragraph (2) of subsection (b), the Secretary shall submit to the appropriate congressional committees a report on the results of the review required by that subsection. A report may include the results of the reviews of more than one system and system upgrade. For any system or system upgrade determined not to be in compliance with the ABM Treaty, the Secretary shall indicate (A) what changes to the ABM Treaty would be required for the system to be deemed compliant with such modified ABM Treaty, and (B) what changes to the performance capability of the system or system upgrade would be required in order for it to become compliant with the existing Treaty, together with the effect of those performance capability changes on the effectiveness of the planned missile defense architecture.

(2) With regard to the Brilliant Eyes space-based sensor system, the Secretary shall include in the report findings on each of the following issues:

(A) Whether the current baseline configuration of the Brilliant Eyes space-based sensor system would comply with the ABM Treaty if the system were used in conjunction with the planned ground-based radar system and its ground-based interceptors at Grand Forks, North Dakota.

(B) If not, whether design changes or operational changes can be made to the Brilliant Eyes space-based sensor system that—

(1) will result in the sensor system, when employed in conjunction with the planned ground-based radar system and its ground-based interceptors, being in compliance with the ABM Treaty; and

(2) will not prevent the sensor system from performing its strategic defense missions with a high degree of effectiveness.

(C) If not, whether the Brilliant Eyes space-based sensor system can be made, through design changes or operational changes, for use only with theater missile defense systems and be in compliance with the ABM Treaty.

(D) If so, the extent to which deployment of the Brilliant Eyes space-based sensor system would enhance the capability of upper-tier theater defense systems and lower-tier theater defense systems, respectively.

(d) LIMITATIONS ON FUNDING PENDING SUBMISSION OF REPORT.—(1) Not more than 50 percent of the funds reported pursuant to section 231(e) to be allocated for fiscal year 1994 for a system or system upgrade specified in subsection (b)(2) may be obligated for that system or system upgrade, or any of its components, until the Secretary completes the compliance review of such system or system upgrade required by subsection (b) and submits to the appropriate congressional committees the report on the results of the compliance review of that system or system upgrade as required by subsection (c).

(2) Funds appropriated to the Department of Defense for fiscal year 1994, or otherwise made available to the Department of Defense from any funds appropriated for fiscal year 1994 or for any fiscal year before 1994, may not be obligated or expended—

(A) for any development or testing of anti-ballistic missile systems or components except for development and testing consistent with the interpretation of the ABM Treaty set forth in the enclosure to the July 13, 1993, ACDA letter; or

(B) for the acquisition of any material or equipment (including long lead materials, components, piece parts, or test equipment, or any modified space launch vehicle) required or to be used for the development or testing of anti-ballistic missile systems or components, except for material or equipment required for development or testing consistent with the interpretation of the ABM Treaty set forth in the enclosure to the July 13, 1993, ACDA letter.

(e) DEFINITIONS.—In this section:

(1) The term "July 13, 1993, ACDA letter" means the letter dated July 13, 1993, from the Acting Director of the Arms Control and Disarmament Agency to the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate relating to the correct interpretation of the ABM Treaty and accompanied by an enclosure setting forth such interpretation.

(2) The term "ABM Treaty" means the Treaty between the United States of America and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics on the Limitation of Anti-Ballistic Missiles, signed in Moscow on May 26, 1972.

(3) The term "appropriate congressional committees" means—

(A) the Committee on Armed Services, the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and the Committee on Appropriations of the House of Representatives; and

(B) the Committee on Armed Services, the Committee on Foreign Relations, and the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate.

SEC. 235. THEATER MISSILE DEFENSE MASTER PLAN.

(a) INTEGRATION AND COMPATIBILITY.—In carrying out the Theater Missile Defense Initiative, the Secretary of Defense shall—

(1) seek to maximize the use of existing systems and technologies; and

(2) seek to promote joint use by the military departments of existing and future ballistic missile defense equipment (rather than each military department developing its own systems that would largely overlap in their capabilities).

The Secretaries of the military departments shall seek the maximum integration and compatibility of their ballistic missile defense systems as well as of the respective roles and missions of those systems.

(b) TMD MASTER PLAN.—The Secretary of Defense shall submit to Congress a report (which shall constitute the TMD master plan) containing a thorough and complete analysis of the future of theater missile defense programs. The report shall include the following:

(1) A description of the mission and scope of Theater Missile Defense.

(2) A description of the role of each of the Armed Forces in Theater Missile Defense.

(3) A description of how those roles interact and complement each other.

(4) An evaluation of the cost and relative effectiveness of each interceptor and sensor under development as part of a Theater Missile Defense system by the Ballistic Missile Defense Organization.

(5) A detailed acquisition strategy which includes an analysis and comparison of the projected acquisition and life-cycle costs of each Theater Missile Defense system intended for production (shown separately for research, development, test, and evaluation, for procurement, for operation and maintenance, and for personnel costs for each system).

(6) Specification of the baseline production rate for each year of the program through completion of procurement.

(7) An estimate of the unit cost and capabilities of each system.

(8) A description of plans for theater and tactical missile defense doctrine, training, tactics, and force structure.

(c) DESCRIPTION OF TESTING PROGRAM.—The Secretary of Defense shall include in the report under subsection (b)—

(1) a description of the current and projected testing program for Theater Missile Defense systems and major components; and

(2) an evaluation of the adequacy of the testing program to simulate conditions similar to those the systems and components would actually be expected to encounter if and when deployed (such as the ability to track and engage multiple targets with multiple interceptors, to discriminate targets from decoys and other incoming objects, and to be employed in a shoot-look-shoot firing mode).

(d) RELATIONSHIP TO ARMS CONTROL TREATIES.—The Secretary shall include in the report under subsection (b) a statement of how production and deployment of any projected Theater Missile Defense program will conform to all relevant arms control agreements. The report shall describe any potential noncompliance with any such agreement, when such noncompliance is expected to occur, and whether provisions need to be renegotiated within that agreement to address future contingencies.

(e) SUBMISSION OF REPORT.—The report required by subsection (b) shall be submitted as part of the next annual report of the Secretary submitted to Congress under section 224 of Public Law 101-189 (10 U.S.C. 2431 note).

(f) OBJECTIVES OF PLAN.—In preparing the master plan, the Secretary shall—

(1) seek to maximize the use of existing technologies (such as SM-2, AEGIS, Patriot, and THAAD) rather than develop new systems;

(2) seek to maximize integration and compatibility among the systems, roles, and missions of the military departments; and

(3) seek to promote cross-service use of existing equipment (such as development of Army equipment for the Marine Corps or ground utilization of an air or sea system).

(g) REVIEW AND REPORT ON DEPLOYMENT OF BALLISTIC MISSILE DEFENSES.—(1) The Secretary of Defense shall conduct an intensive and extensive review of opportunities to streamline the weapon systems acquisition process applicable to the development, testing, and deployment of theater ballistic missile defenses with the objective of reducing the cost of deployment and accelerating the schedule for deployment without significantly increasing programmatic risk or concurrency.

(2) In conducting the review, the Secretary shall obtain recommendations and advice from—

(A) the Defense Science Board;

(B) the faculty of the Industrial College of the Armed Forces; and

(C) federally funded research and development centers supporting the Office of the Secretary of Defense.

(3) Not later than May 1, 1994, the Secretary shall submit to the congressional defense committees a report on the Secretary's findings resulting from the review under paragraph (1), together with any recommendations of the Secretary for legislation. The Secretary shall submit the report in unclassified form, but may submit a classified version of the report if necessary to clarify any of the information in the findings or recommendations or any related information. The report may be submitted as part of the next annual report of the Secretary submitted to Congress under section 224 of Public Law 101-189 (10 U.S.C. 2431 note).

SEC. 236. LIMITED DEFENSE SYSTEM DEVELOPMENT PLAN.

(a) REQUIREMENT FOR REPORT.—(1) The Secretary of Defense shall submit to the congressional defense committees a report on the development plan for a Limited Defense System covering the period of fiscal years 1994 through 1999.

(2) The report under paragraph (1) shall be submitted not later than May 30, 1994, and may be included in the next annual report on ballistic missile defenses submitted to Congress under section 224 of Public Law 101-189 (10 U.S.C. 2431 note).

(b) ISSUES TO BE ADDRESSED IN REPORT.—The report under subsection (a) shall include discussion of the following matters:

(1) The proposed Limited Defense System architecture.

(2) The systems and components to be developed to implement that architecture.

(3) The extent to which those systems and components can be developed during the period referred to in subsection (a), assuming annual funding for the Limited Defense System averaging $600,000,000 per year.

(4) The additional funding required and the additional time required after fiscal year 1999 in order for initial deployment of a limited, ABM-Treaty-compliant capability at a single site to be implemented.

(5) The variations in both required funding and required time after fiscal year 1999 for the same initial deployment to be implemented—

(A) if funding for a Limited Defense System during fiscal years 1995 through 1999 averages $750,000,000 per year; and

(B) if funding for a Limited Defense System during fiscal years 1995 through 1999 averages $450,000,000 per year.

(6) The extent to which missile defense technologies and components that are developed for Theater Missile Defense systems to be deployed before fiscal year 2000 can reduce the development costs and lead-times for development and deployment of a Limited Defense System.

(7) The extent to which acquisition streamlining can be applied to the development of a Limited Defense System.

(8) The extent to which the testing and simulation infrastructure, the level of engineering and technical support, the extensive reliance on studies and analyses by contractors, and the substantial use of outside contractors for systems engineering and technical analysis which the Ballistic Missile Defense Organization has inherited from the Strategic Defense Initiative Organization can be reduced given the re-evaluation of the Ballistic Missile Defense program that has emerged from the Bottom-Up Review of the Secretary of Defense which was conducted during 1993.

(9) Such other matters as the Secretary considers important.

SEC. 237. THEATER AND LIMITED DEFENSE SYSTEM TESTING.

(a) TESTING OF THEATER MISSILE DEFENSE INTERCEPTORS.—Except for the acquisition of those production representative missiles required for the completion of developmental and operational testing, the Secretary of Defense may not approve a theater missile defense interceptor program proceeding into the Low-Rate Initial Production (Milestone IIIA) acquisition stage until the Secretary certifies to the congressional defense committees that more than two realistic live-fire tests, consistent with section 2366 of title 10, United States Code, have been conducted, the results of which demonstrate the achievement by the interceptors of the weapons systems performance goals specified in the system baseline document established pursuant to section 2435(a)(1)(A) of title 10, United States Code, before the program entered engineering and manufacturing systems development. The live-fire tests demonstrating such results shall involve multiple interceptors and multiple targets in the presence of realistic countermeasures.

(b) ADVANCE REVIEW AND APPROVAL OF PROPOSED DEVELOPMENTAL TESTS OF LIMITED DEFENSE SYSTEM PROGRAM PROJECTS.—A developmental test may not be conducted under the Limited Defense System program element of the Ballistic Missile Defense Program until the Secretary of Defense reviews and approves (or approves with changes) the test plan for such developmental test.

(c) INDEPENDENT MONITORING OF TESTS.—(1) The Secretary shall provide for monitoring of the implementation of each test plan referred to in subsection (b) by a group composed of persons who—

(A) by reason of education, training, or experience are qualified to monitor the testing covered by the plan; and

(B) are not assigned or detailed to, or otherwise performing duties of, the Ballistic Missile Defense Organization and are otherwise independent of such organization.

(2) The monitoring group shall submit to the Secretary its analysis of, and conclusions regarding, the conduct and results of each test monitored by the group.

SEC. 238. ARROW TACTICAL ANTI-MISSILE PROGRAM.

(a) ENDORSEMENT OF COOPERATIVE RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT.—Congress reiterates its endorsement (previously stated in section 225(a)(5) of Public Law 101-510 (104 Stat. 1515) and section 241(a) of Public Law 102-190 (105 Stat. 1326)) of a continuing program of cooperative research and development, jointly funded by the United States and Israel, on the Arrow Tactical Anti-Missile program.

(b) PROGRAM GOAL.—The goal of the cooperative program is to demonstrate the feasibility and practicality of the Arrow system and to permit the government of Israel to make a decision on its own initiative regarding deployment of that system without financial participation by the United States beyond the research and development stage.

(c) ARROW CONTINUING EXPERIMENTS.—The Secretary of Defense, from amounts appropriated to the Department of Defense pursuant to section 201 for Defense-wide activities and available for the Ballistic Missile Defense Organization, shall fund the United States contribution to the fiscal year 1994 Arrow Continuing Experiments program in an amount not to exceed $56,400,000.

(d) ARROW DEPLOYABILITY INITIATIVE.—(1) Subject to paragraph (2), the Secretary of Defense may obligate funds appropriated pursuant to section 201 in an amount not to exceed $25,000,000 for the purpose of research and development of technologies associated with deploying the Arrow missile in the future (including technologies associated with battle management, lethality, system integration, and test bed systems).

(2) Funds may not be obligated for the purpose stated in paragraph (1) (other than as required to satisfy the conditions set forth in this paragraph) unless the President certifies to Congress that—

(A) the United States and the government of Israel have entered into an agreement governing the conduct and funding of research and development projects for the purpose stated in paragraph (1);

(B) each project in which the United States will join under that agreement (1) will have a benefit for the United States, and (1) has not been barred by other congressional direction;

(C) the Arrow missile has successfully completed a flight test in which it intercepted a target missile under realistic test conditions; and

(D) the government of Israel is continuing, in accordance with its previous public commitments, to adhere to export controls pursuant to the Guidelines and Annex of the Missile Technology Control Regime.

(e) SENSE OF CONGRESS ON EXPEDITING TEST PROGRAM.—It is the sense of Congress that, in order to expedite the test program for the Arrow missile, the United States should seek to initiate with the government of Israel discussions on the agreement referred to in subsection (d)(2)(A) without waiting for the condition specified in subsection (d)(2)(C) to be met first.

SEC. 239. REPORT ON ARROW TACTICAL ANTI-MISSILE PROGRAM.

(a) REPORT REQUIRED.—Not later than April 1, 1994, the Secretary of Defense shall submit to the congressional defense committees a report on the Arrow Tactical Anti-Missile program. The Secretary shall design the report to provide those committees with the information they need in order to perform their oversight function. The Secretary shall obtain the information for the report from actual program data to which the United States Government has access, to the extent possible, or, if necessary, from the best estimates available to the United States Government.

(b) CONTENT OF REPORT.—The report shall include (at a minimum) the following:

(1) The development and procurement schedules for the program.

(2) The estimated annual and total cost of the program.

(3) The estimated total cost to the United States of involvement in the program, including funding provided through foreign military sales financing under the Arms Export Control Act.

(4) A detailed description of the contract types and cost estimating data for the program.

(5) An assessment of the performance of the Arrow interceptor and the Arrow system.

(6) An evaluation of the development and production risks under the program.

(7) Alternatives to the Arrow interceptor and Arrow system for meeting the tactical ballistic missile defense needs of Israel, including providing Israel with an existing or planned United States weapon system.

(8) For each such alternative—

(A) an assessment of the cost effectiveness of undertaking the alternative;

(B) the technology transfer implications; and

(C) the weapon proliferation implications.

(c) FORM OF REPORT.—The Secretary shall submit the report in classified and unclassified versions.

(d) CONSTRUCTION OF SECTION.—Nothing in this section shall be construed to endorse United States participation in any aspect of the Arrow program beyond the research and development programs authorized by law.

SEC. 240. TECHNICAL AMENDMENTS TO ANNUAL REPORT REQUIREMENT TO REFLECT CREATION OF BALLISTIC MISSILE DEFENSE ORGANIZATION.

Section 224 of the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Years 1990 and 1991 (10 U.S.C. 2431 note) is amended—

(1) by striking out "Strategic Defense Initiative" each place it appears (other than in subsection (b)(5)) and inserting in lieu thereof "Ballistic Missile Defense program";

(2) by striking out "Strategic Defense Initiative" in subsection (b)(5) and inserting in lieu thereof "Ballistic Missile Defense";

(3) by striking out "SDI" each place it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "BMD"; and

(4) by striking out the section heading and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"SEC. 224. ANNUAL REPORT ON BALLISTIC MISSILE DEFENSE PROGRAM."

SEC. 241. CLEMENTINE SATELLITE PROGRAM.

(a) FINDING.—The Congress finds that the program of the Ballistic Missile Defense Organization that is known as the "Clementine" program, consisting of a satellite space project that will, among other matters, provide valuable information about asteroids in the vicinity of Earth, represents an important opportunity for transfer of Department of Defense technology for civilian purposes and should be supported.

(b) CONGRESSIONAL VIEWS.—The Congress urges the Secretary of Defense—

(1) to identify an appropriate management structure within either the Advanced Research Projects Agency or one of the military departments to which the Clementine program and related programs of general applicability to civilian, commercial, and military space programs might be transferred; and

(2) to consider funding for the Clementine program to be a priority within whatever agency or department is identified as described in paragraph (1) and to provide funds for that program at an appropriate level.

SEC. 242. COOPERATION OF UNITED STATES ALLIES ON DEVELOPMENT OF TACTICAL AND THEATER MISSILE DEFENSES.

(a) FINDINGS.—Congress makes the following findings:

(1) Systems to provide effective defense against theater and tactical ballistic missiles that may be developed and deployed by the United States have the potential to make contributions to the national security interests of nations that are allies of the United States that would be equal to or greater than the contributions such systems would make to the national security interests of the United States.

(2) The cost of developing and deploying a broad spectrum of such systems will be several tens of billions of dollars.

(3) A truly cooperative multinational approach to the development and deployment of such systems could substantially reduce the financial burden of such an undertaking on any one country and would involve additional sources of technological expertise.

(4) While leaders of nations that are allies of the United States have stated an interest in becoming involved, or increasing involvement, in United States tactical missile defense programs, the governments of those nations are unlikely to support programs for theater missile defense development and deployment unless, at a minimum, they can participate in meaningful ways in the planning and execution of such programs, including active participation in research and development and production of the systems involved.

(5) Given the high cost of developing theater ballistic missile defense systems, the participation of United States allies in the efforts to develop tactical missile defenses would result in substantial savings to the United States.

(b) PLAN AND REPORTS.—(1) The Secretary of Defense shall develop a plan to coordinate development and implementation of Theater Missile Defense programs of the United States with theater missile defense programs of United States allies, with the goal of avoiding duplication of effort, increasing interoperability, and reducing costs. The plan shall set forth in detail any financial, in-kind, or other form of participation by each nation in cooperative efforts to plan, develop, produce, and deploy theater ballistic missile defenses for the mutual benefit of the countries involved.

(2) The Secretary shall submit to Congress a report on the plan developed under paragraph (1). The report shall be submitted in both classified and unclassified versions, as appropriate, and may be submitted as a component of the next Theater Missile Defense Initiative report to Congress.

(3) The Secretary shall include in each annual Theater Missile Defense Initiative report to Congress a report on actions taken to implement the plan developed under paragraph (1). Each such report shall set forth the status of discussions between the United States and United States allies for the purposes stated in that paragraph and shall state the status of contributions by those allies to the Theater Missile Defense Cooperation Account, shown separately for each allied country covered by the plan.

(c) RESTRICTION ON FUNDS.—Of the total amount appropriated pursuant to authorizations in this Act for theater ballistic missile defense programs, not more than 80 percent may be obligated until—

(1) the report under subsection (b)(2) is submitted to Congress; and

(2) the President certifies in writing to Congress that representatives of the United States have formally submitted to each of the member nations of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization and to Japan, Israel, and South Korea a proposal concerning the matters described in the report.

The President may submit with such certification a report of similar formal contacts with any other country that the President considers appropriate.

(d) SENSE OF CONGRESS.—It is the sense of Congress that whenever the United States deploys theater ballistic missile defenses to protect another country, or the military forces of another country, that has not provided financial or in-kind support for development of theater ballistic missile defenses, the United States should consider whether it is appropriate to seek reimbursement from that country to cover at least the incremental cost to the United States of such deployment.

(e) ALLIED PARTICIPATION IN TMD PROGRAMS.—Congress encourages allies of the United States, and particularly those allies that would benefit most from deployment of Theater Missile Defense systems, to participate in, or to increase participation in, cooperative Theater Missile Defense programs of the United States. Congress also encourages participation by the United States in cooperative theater missile defense efforts of allied nations as such programs emerge.

(f) FUND FOR ALLIED CONTRIBUTIONS.—(1) Chapter 155 of title 10, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following new section:

"§2609. Theater Missile Defense: acceptance of contributions from allies; Theater Missile Defense Cooperation Account

"(a) ACCEPTANCE AUTHORITY.—The Secretary of Defense may accept from any allied foreign government or any international organization any contribution of money made by such foreign government or international organization for use by the Department of Defense for Theater Missile Defense programs.

"(b) ESTABLISHMENT OF THEATER MISSILE DEFENSE COOPERATION ACCOUNT.—(1) There is established in the Treasury a special account to be known as the "Theater Missile Defense Cooperation Account".

"(2) Contributions accepted by the Secretary of Defense under subsection (a) shall be credited to the Account.

"(c) USE OF THE ACCOUNT.—Funds in the Account are hereby made available for obligation for research, development, test, and evaluation, and for procurement, for Theater Missile Defense programs of the Department of Defense.

"(d) INVESTMENT OF MONEY.—(1) Upon request by the Secretary of Defense, the Secretary of the Treasury may invest money in the Account in securities of the United States or in securities guaranteed as to principal and interest by the United States.

"(2) Any interest or other income that accrues from investment in securities referred to in paragraph (1) shall be deposited to the credit of the Account.

"(e) NOTIFICATION OF CONDITIONS.—The Secretary of Defense shall notify Congress of any condition imposed by the donor on the use of any contribution accepted by the Secretary under the authority of this section.

"(f) ANNUAL AUDIT BY GAO.—The Comptroller General of the United States shall conduct an annual audit of money accepted by the Secretary of Defense under this section and shall submit a copy of the results of each such audit to Congress.

"(g) REGULATIONS.—The Secretary of Defense shall prescribe regulations to carry out this section."

(2) The table of sections at the beginning of such chapter is amended by adding at the end the following new item:

SEC. 243. TRANSFER OF FOLLOW-ON TECHNOLOGY PROGRAMS.

(a) MANAGEMENT RESPONSIBILITY.—Except as provided in subsection (b), the Secretary of Defense shall provide that management and budget responsibility for research and development of any program, project, or activity to develop far-term follow-on technology relating to ballistic missile defense shall be provided through the Advanced Research Projects Agency or the appropriate military department.

(b) WAIVER AUTHORITY.—The Secretary may waive the provisions of subsection (a) in the case of a particular program, project, or activity if the Secretary certifies to the congressional defense committees that it is in the national security interest of the United States to provide management and budget responsibility for that program, project, or activity through the Ballistic Missile Defense Organization.

(c) REPORT REQUIRED.—As a part of the report required by section 231(e), the Secretary shall submit to the congressional defense committees a report identifying—

(1) each program, project, and activity with respect to which the Secretary has transferred management and budget responsibility from the Ballistic Missile Defense Organization in accordance with subsection (a);

(2) the agency or military department to which each such transfer was made; and

(3) the date on which each such transfer was made.

(d) DEFINITION.—For the purposes of this section, the term “far-term follow-on technology” means a technology that is not incorporated into a ballistic missile defense architecture and is not likely to be incorporated within 15 years into a weapon system for ballistic missile defense.

(e) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—Section 234 of the Missile Defense Act of 1991 is repealed.

SEC. 251. DEFENSE WOMEN'S HEALTH RESEARCH CENTER.

(a) AUTHORITY TO ESTABLISH CENTER.—The Secretary of Defense may establish a Defense Women's Health Research Center (hereinafter in this section referred to as the “Center”) at an existing Department of Defense medical center to serve as the coordinating agent for multidisciplinary and multi-institutional research within the Department of Defense on women's health issues related to service in the Armed Forces. The Secretary shall determine whether or not to establish the Center not later than May 1, 1994. If established, the Center shall also coordinate with research supported by the Department of Health and Human Services and other agencies that is aimed at improving the health of women.

(b) SUPPORT OF RESEARCH.—The Center shall support health research into matters relating to the service of women in the military, including the following matters:

(1) Combat stress and trauma.

(2) Exposure to toxins and other environmental hazards associated with military equipment.

(3) Psychology related stress in warfare situations.

(4) Mental health, including post-traumatic stress disorder and depression.

(5) Human factor studies related to women in combat areas.

(c) COMPETITION REQUIREMENT RELATING TO ESTABLISHMENT OF CENTER.—The Center may be established only pursuant to a competition among existing Department of Defense medical centers.

(d) IMPLEMENTATION PLAN.—The Secretary of Defense shall prepare a plan for the implementation of subsection (a). The plan shall be submitted to the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and House of Representatives before May 1, 1994.

(e) ACTIVITIES FOR FISCAL YEAR 1994.—During fiscal year 1994, the Center may address the following:

(1) Program planning, infrastructure development, baseline information gathering, technology infusion, and connectivity.

(2) Management and technical staffing.

(3) Data base development of health issues related to service by women on active duty as compared to service by women in the National Guard or Reserves.

(4) Research protocols, cohort development, health surveillance, and epidemiologic studies, to be developed in coordination with the Centers for Disease Control and the National Institutes of Health whenever possible.

(f) FUNDING.—Of the funds authorized to be appropriated pursuant to section 201, $20,000,000 shall be available for the establishment of the Center or for medical research at existing Department of Defense medical centers into matters relating to service by women in the military.

(g) REPORT.—(1) If the Secretary of Defense determines not to establish a women's health center under subsection (a), the Secretary shall submit to the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and House of Representatives, not later than May 1, 1994, a report on the plans of the Secretary for the use of the funds described in subsection (f).

(2) If the Secretary determines to establish the Center, the Secretary shall, not less than 60 days before the establishment of the Center, submit to those committees a report describing the planned location for the Center and the competitive process used in the selection of that location.

SEC. 252. INCLUSION OF WOMEN AND MINORITIES IN CLINICAL RESEARCH PROJECTS.

(a) GENERAL RULE.—In conducting or supporting clinical research, the Secretary of Defense shall ensure that—

(1) women who are members of the Armed Forces are included as subjects in each project of such research; and

(2) members of minority groups who are members of the Armed Forces are included as subjects of such research.

Subtitle G—Other MattersSEC. 571. POLICY CONCERNING HOMOSEXUALITY IN THE ARMED FORCES.

(a) CODIFICATION.—(1) Chapter 37 of title 10, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following new section:

“§ 654. Policy concerning homosexuality in the armed forces

“(a) FINDINGS.—Congress makes the following findings:

“(1) Section 8 of article I of the Constitution of the United States commits exclusively to the Congress the powers to raise and support armies, provide and maintain a Navy, and make rules for the government and regulation of the land and naval forces.

"(2) There is no constitutional right to serve in the armed forces.

"(3) Pursuant to the powers conferred by section 8 of article I of the Constitution of the United States, it lies within the discretion of the Congress to establish qualifications for and conditions of service in the armed forces.

"(4) The primary purpose of the armed forces is to prepare for and to prevail in combat should the need arise.

"(5) The conduct of military operations requires members of the armed forces to make extraordinary sacrifices, including the ultimate sacrifice, in order to provide for the common defense.

"(6) Success in combat requires military units that are characterized by high morale, good order and discipline, and unit cohesion.

"(7) One of the most critical elements in combat capability is unit cohesion, that is, the bonds of trust among individual service members that make the combat effectiveness of a military unit greater than the sum of the combat effectiveness of the individual unit members.

"(8) Military life is fundamentally different from civilian life in that—

"(A) the extraordinary responsibilities of the armed forces, the unique conditions of military service, and the critical role of unit cohesion, require that the military community, while subject to civilian control, exist as a specialized society; and

"(B) the military society is characterized by its own laws, rules, customs, and traditions, including numerous restrictions on personal behavior, that would not be acceptable in civilian society.

"(9) The standards of conduct for members of the armed forces regulate a member's life for 24 hours each day beginning at the moment the member enters military status and not ending until that person is discharged or otherwise separated from the armed forces.

"(10) Those standards of conduct, including the Uniform Code of Military Justice, apply to a member of the armed forces at all times that the member has a military status, whether the member is on base or off base, and whether the member is on duty or off duty.

"(11) The pervasive application of the standards of conduct is necessary because members of the armed forces must be ready at all times for worldwide deployment to a combat environment.

"(12) The worldwide deployment of United States military forces, the international responsibilities of the United States, and the potential for involvement of the armed forces in actual combat routinely make it necessary for members of the armed forces involuntarily to accept living conditions and working conditions that are often spartan, primitive, and characterized by forced intimacy with little or no privacy.

"(13) The prohibition against homosexual conduct is a longstanding element of military law that continues to be necessary in the unique circumstances of military service.

"(14) The armed forces must maintain personnel policies that exclude persons whose presence in the armed forces would create an unacceptable risk to the armed forces' high standards of morale, good order and discipline, and unit cohesion that are the essence of military capability.

"(15) The presence in the armed forces of persons who demonstrate a propensity or intent to engage in homosexual acts would create an unacceptable risk to the high standards of morale, good order and discipline, and unit cohesion that are the essence of military capability.

"(b) POLICY.—A member of the armed forces shall be separated from the armed forces under regulations prescribed by the Secretary of Defense if one or more of the following findings is made and approved in accordance with procedures set forth in such regulations:

"(1) That the member has engaged in, attempted to engage in, or solicited another to engage in a homosexual act or acts unless there are further findings, made and approved in accordance with procedures set forth in such regulations, that the member has demonstrated that—

"(A) such conduct is a departure from the member's usual and customary behavior;

"(B) such conduct, under all the circumstances, is unlikely to recur;

"(C) such conduct was not accomplished by use of force, coercion, or intimidation;

"(D) under the particular circumstances of the case, the member's continued presence in the armed forces is consistent with the interests of the armed forces in proper discipline, good order, and morale; and

"(E) the member does not have a propensity or intent to engage in homosexual acts.

"(2) That the member has stated that he or she is a homosexual or bisexual, or words to that effect, unless there is a further finding, made and approved in accordance with procedures set forth in the regulations, that the member has demonstrated that he or she is not a person who engages in, attempts to engage in, has a propensity to engage in, or intends to engage in homosexual acts.

"(3) That the member has married or attempted to marry a person known to be of the same biological sex.

"(c) ENTRY STANDARDS AND DOCUMENTS.—(1) The Secretary of Defense shall ensure that the standards for enlistment and appointment of members of the armed forces reflect the policies set forth in subsection (b).

"(2) The documents used to effectuate the enlistment or appointment of a person as a member of the armed forces shall set forth the provisions of subsection (b).

"(d) REQUIRED BRIEFINGS.—The briefings that members of the armed forces receive upon entry into the armed forces and periodically thereafter under section 937 of this title (article 137 of the Uniform Code of Military Justice) shall include a detailed explanation of the applicable laws and regulations governing sexual conduct by members of the armed forces, including the policies prescribed under subsection (b).

"(e) RULE OF CONSTRUCTION.—Nothing in subsection (b) shall be construed to require that a member of the armed forces be processed for separation from the armed forces when a determination is made in accordance with regulations prescribed by the Secretary of Defense that—

"(1) the member engaged in conduct or made statements for the purpose of avoiding or terminating military service; and

"(2) separation of the member would not be in the best interest of the armed forces.

"(f) DEFINITIONS.—In this section:

"(1) The term 'homosexual' means a person, regardless of sex, who engages in, attempts to engage in, has a propensity to engage in, or intends to engage in homosexual acts, and includes the terms 'gay' and 'lesbian'.

"(2) The term 'bisexual' means a person who engages in, attempts to engage in, has a propensity to engage in, or intends to engage in homosexual and heterosexual acts.

"(3) The term 'homosexual act' means—
"(A) any bodily contact, actively undertaken or passively permitted, between members of the same sex for the purpose of satisfying sexual desires; and

"(B) any bodily contact which a reasonable person would understand to demonstrate a propensity or intent to engage in an act described in subparagraph (A)."

(2) The table of sections at the beginning of such chapter is amended by adding at the end the following:

"654. Policy concerning homosexuality in the armed forces."

(b) REGULATIONS.—Not later than 90 days after the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary of Defense shall revise Department of Defense regulations, and issue such new regulations as may be necessary, to implement section 654 of title 10, United States Code, as added by subsection (a).

(c) SAVINGS PROVISION.—Nothing in this section or section 654 of title 10, United States Code, as added by subsection (a), may be construed to invalidate any inquiry, investigation, administrative action or proceeding, court-martial, or judicial proceeding conducted before the effective date of regulations issued by the Secretary of Defense to implement such section 654.

(d) SENSE OF CONGRESS.—It is the sense of Congress that—

(1) the suspension of questioning concerning homosexuality as part of the processing of individuals for accession into the Armed Forces under the interim policy of January 29, 1993, should be continued, but the Secretary of Defense may reinstate that questioning with such questions or such revised questions as he considers appropriate if the Secretary determines that it is necessary to do so in order to effectuate the policy set forth in section 654 of title 10, United States Code, as added by subsection (a); and the agreement) and, by reason of the provision of the agreement required under subsection (a)(3), may owe a debt to the United States and in which that person disputes that such a debt is owed, the Secretary shall designate a member of the armed forces or a civilian employee under the jurisdiction of the Secretary to investigate the facts of the case and hear evidence presented by the person who may owe the debt and other parties, as appropriate, in order to determine the validity of the debt. That official shall report the official's findings and recommendations to the Secretary concerned. If the justification for the debt investigated includes an allegation of misconduct, the investigating official shall state in the report the official's assessment as to whether the individual behavior that resulted in the separation of the person who may owe the debt qualifies as misconduct under subsection (a)(3).

(2) the Secretary of Defense should consider issuing guidance governing the circumstances under which members of the Armed Forces questioned about homosexuality for administrative purposes should be afforded warnings similar to the warnings under section 831(b) of title 10, United States Code (article 31(b) of the Uniform Code of Military Justice).

"(2) The Secretary of each military department shall ensure that a member of the armed forces who may be subject to a reimbursement requirement under this section is advised of such requirement before (1) submitting a request for voluntary separation, or (2) making a decision on a course of action regarding personal involvement in administrative, nonjudicial, and judicial action resulting from alleged misconduct.

"(h) The Secretary concerned may, at any time before October 1, 1998, modify an agreement described in subsection (a) to reduce the active duty service obligation specified in the agreement if the Secretary determines that it is in the best interests of the United States to do so. In such a case, the Secretary shall reduce the amount required to be reimbursed to the United States proportionately with the reduction in the period of obligated active duty service."

Subtitle E—Commission on Roles and Missions of the Armed Forces

SEC. 951. FINDINGS.

Congress makes the following findings:

(1) The current allocation of roles and missions among the Armed Forces evolved from the practice during World War II to meet the Cold War threat and may no longer be appropriate for the post-Cold War era.

(2) Many analysts believe that a realignment of those roles and mission is essential for the efficiency and effectiveness of the Armed Forces, particularly in light of lower budgetary resources that will be available to the Department of Defense in the future.

(3) The existing process of a triennial review of roles and missions by the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff pursuant to provisions of law enacted by the Goldwater-Nichols Department of Defense Reorganization Act of 1986 has not produced the comprehensive review envisioned by Congress.

(4) It is difficult for any organization, and may be particularly difficult for the Department of Defense, to reform itself without the benefit and authority provided by external perspectives and analysis.

SEC. 952. ESTABLISHMENT OF COMMISSION.

(a) ESTABLISHMENT.—There is hereby established a commission to be known as the Commission on Roles and Missions of the Armed Forces (hereinafter in this subtitle referred to as the "Commission").

(d) INITIAL ORGANIZATIONAL REQUIREMENTS.—(1) The Secretary shall make all appointments to the Commission within 45 days after the date of the enactment of this Act.

(2) The Commission shall convene its first meeting within 30 days after the first date on which all members of the Commission have been appointed. At that meeting, the Commission shall develop an agenda and a schedule for carrying out its duties.

SEC. 953. DUTIES OF COMMISSION.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Commission shall—

(1) review the efficacy and appropriateness for the post-Cold War era of the current allocations among the Armed Forces of roles, missions, and functions;

(2) evaluate and report on alternative allocations of those roles, missions, and functions; and

(3) make recommendations for changes in the current definition and distribution of those roles, missions, and functions.

(b) REVIEW OF POTENTIAL MILITARY OPERATIONS.—The Commission shall review the types of military operations that may be required in the post-Cold War era, taking into account the requirements for success in various types of operations. As part of such review, the Commission shall take into consideration the official strategic planning of the Department of Defense. The types of operations to be considered by the Commission as part of such review shall include the following:

(1) Defense of the United States.

(2) Warfare against other national military forces.

(3) Participation in peacekeeping, peace enforcement, and other nontraditional activities.

(4) Action against nuclear, chemical, and biological weapons capabilities in hostile hands.

(5) Support of law enforcement.

(6) Other types of operations as specified by the chairman of the Commission.

(c) SENSE OF CONGRESS.—It is the sense of Congress that the bases at which the Extremely Low Frequency Communication System is located, having been considered for closure or realignment in the 1993 base closure process, should again be considered for closure or realignment in the round of military base closures to take place in 1995.

(b) SENSE OF CONGRESS.—It is the sense of Congress that—

(1) reductions in the funding, activities, and capability of the Navy to conduct oceanographic survey and research work, in addition to the reductions referred to in subsection (a)(2), would further reduce the level of oceanographic survey and research work of the Navy and should be avoided; and

(2) The memorial to the U.S.S. "(B) the economic soundness of the applications referred to in subparagraph (A), and

"(C) the amount of guarantee authority available, the Secretary determines, in the sole discretion of the Secretary, that the issuance of a commitment to guarantee obligations for an eligible export vessel will not result in the denial of an economically sound application to issue a commitment to guarantee obligations for vessels documented under the laws of the United States operating in the domestic or foreign commerce of the United States.

"(2) The Secretary may not issue commitments to guarantee obligations for eligible export vessels under this section after the later of—

"(A) the 5th anniversary of the date on which the Secretary publishes final regulations setting forth the application procedures for the issuance of commitments to guarantee obligations for eligible export vessels,

"(B) the last day of any 5-year period in which funding and guarantee authority for obligations for eligible export vessels have been continuously available, or

(D) in subsection (d), by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

"(3) No commitment to guarantee, or guarantee of an obligation may be made by the Secretary under this title for the construction, reconstruction, or reconditioning of an eligible export vessel unless—

"(A) the Secretary finds that the construction, reconstruction, or reconditioning of that vessel will aid in the transition of United States shipyards to commercial activities or will preserve shipbuilding assets that would be essential in time of war or national emergency, and

"(B) the owner of the vessel agrees with the Secretary of Transportation that the vessel shall not be transferred to any country designated by the Secretary of Defense as a country whose interests are hostile to the interests of the United States."; and

"(j)(1) Upon receiving an application for a loan guarantee for an eligible export vessel, the Secretary shall promptly provide to the Secretary of Defense notice of the receipt of the application. During the 30-day period beginning on the date on which the Secretary of Defense receives such notice, the Secretary of Defense may disapprove the loan guarantee based on the assessment of the Secretary of the potential use of the vessel in a manner that may cause harm to United States national security interests. The Secretary of Defense may not disapprove a loan guarantee under this section solely on the basis of the type of vessel to be constructed with the loan guarantee. The authority of the Secretary to disapprove a loan guarantee under this section may not be delegated to

TITLE XIV—MATTERS RELATING TO ALLIES AND OTHER NATIONS

Subtitle A—Defense Burden Sharing

SEC. 1401. DEFENSE BURDENS AND RESPONSIBILITIES.

(a) FINDINGS.—Congress makes the following findings:

(1) Since fiscal year 1985, the budget of the Department of Defense has declined by 34 percent in constant fiscal year 1985 dollars.

(2) During the past few years, the United States military presence overseas has declined significantly in the following ways:

(A) Since fiscal year 1986, the number of United States military personnel permanently stationed overseas has declined by almost 200,000.

(B) From fiscal year 1989 to fiscal year 1994, spending by the United States to support the stationing of United States military forces overseas will have declined by 36 percent.

(C) Since January 1990, the Department of Defense has announced the closure, reduction, or transfer to standby status of 840 United States military facilities overseas, which is approximately a 50 percent reduction in the number of such facilities.

(3) The United States military presence overseas will continue to decline as a result of actions by the executive branch and as a result of the following provisions of law:

(A) Section 1302 of the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1993, which requires a 40 percent reduction by September 30, 1996, in the number of United States military personnel permanently stationed ashore in overseas locations.

(B) Section 1303 of the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1993, which provides that no more than 100,000 United States military personnel may be permanently stationed ashore in NATO member countries after September 30, 1996.

(C) Section 1301 of the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1993, which reduced the spending proposed by the Department of Defense for overseas basing activities during fiscal year 1993 by $500,000,000.

(D) Sections 913 and 915 of the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Years 1990 and 1991, which directed the President to develop a plan to gradually reduce the United States military force structure in East Asia.

(4) The East Asia Strategy Initiative, which was developed in response to sections 913 and 915 of the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Years 1990 and 1991, has resulted in the withdrawal of 12,000 United States military personnel from Japan and the Republic of Korea since fiscal year 1990.

(5) In response to actions by the executive branch and the Congress, allied countries in which United States military personnel are stationed and alliances in which the United States participates have agreed to reduce the costs incurred by the United States in basing military forces overseas in the following ways:

(A) Under the 1991 Special Measures Agreement between Japan and the United States, Japan will pay by 1995 almost all yen-denominated costs of stationing United States military personnel in Japan.

(B) The Republic of Korea has agreed to pay by 1995 one-third of the won-based costs incurred by the United States in stationing United States military personnel in the Republic of Korea.

(C) The North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO) has agreed that the NATO Infrastructure Program will adapt to support post-Cold War strategy and could pay the annual operation and maintenance costs of facilities in Europe and the United States that would support the reinforcement of Europe by United States military forces and the participation of United States military forces in peacekeeping and conflict prevention operations.

(D) Such allied countries and alliances have agreed to share more fully the responsibilities and burdens of providing for mutual security and stability through steps such as the following:

(1) The Republic of Korea has assumed the leadership role regarding ground combat forces for the defense of the Republic of Korea.

(1i) NATO has adopted the new mission of conducting peacekeeping operations and is, for example, providing land, sea, and air forces for United Nations efforts in the former Yugoslavia.

(1ii) The countries of western Europe are contributing substantially to the development of democracy, stability, and open market societies in eastern Europe and the former Soviet Union.

(b) SENSE OF CONGRESS.—It is the sense of Congress that—

(1) the forward presence of United States military personnel stationed overseas continues to be important to United States security interests;

(2) that forward presence facilitates efforts to pursue United States security interests on a collective basis rather than pursuing them on a far more costly unilateral basis or receding into isolationism;

(3) the bilateral and multilateral arrangements and alliances in which that forward presence plays a part must be further adapted to the security environment of the post-Cold War period;

(4) the cost-sharing percentages for the NATO Infrastructure Program should be reviewed with the aim of reflecting current economic, political, and military realities and thus reducing the United States cost-sharing percentage; and

(5) the amounts obligated to conduct United States overseas basing activities should decline significantly in fiscal year 1994 and in future fiscal years as—

(A) the number of United States military personnel stationed overseas continues to decline; and

(B) the countries in which United States military personnel are stationed and the alliances in which the United States participates assume an increased share of United States overseas basing costs.

(c) REDUCING UNITED STATES OVERSEAS BASING COSTS.—(1) In order to achieve additional savings in overseas basing costs, the President should—

(A) continue with the reductions in United States military presence overseas as required by sections 1302 and 1303 of the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1993; and

(B) intensify efforts to negotiate a more favorable host-nation agreement with each foreign country to which this paragraph applies under paragraph (3)(A).

(2) For purposes of paragraph (1)(B), a more favorable host-nation agreement is an agreement under which such foreign country—

(A) assumes an increased share of the costs of United States military installations in that country, including the costs of—

(i) labor, utilities, and services;

(ii) military construction projects and real property maintenance;

(iii) leasing requirements associated with the United States military presence; and

(iv) actions necessary to meet local environmental standards;

(B) relieves the United States of all tax liability that, with respect to forces located in that country, is incurred by the Armed Forces of the United States under the laws of that country and the laws of the community where those forces are located; and

(C) ensures that goods and services furnished in that country to the Armed Forces of the United States are provided at minimum cost and without imposition of user fees.

(3)(A) Except as provided in subparagraph (B), paragraph (1)(B) applies with respect to—

(i) each country of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (other than the United States); and

(ii) each other foreign country with which the United States has a bilateral or multilateral defense agreement that provides for the assignment of combat units of the Armed Forces of the United States to permanent duty in that country or the placement of combat equipment of the United States in that country.

(B) Paragraph (1) does not apply with respect to—

(i) a foreign country that receives assistance under section 23 of the Arms Export Control Act (22 U.S.C. 2763) (relating to the foreign military financing program) or under the provisions of chapter 4 of part II of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961 (22 U.S.C. 2346 et seq.); or

(ii) a foreign country that has agreed to assume, not later than September 30, 1996, at least 75 percent of the nonpersonnel costs of United States military installations in the country.

(d) OBLIGATIONAL LIMITATION.—(1) The total amount appropriated to the Department of Defense for Military Personnel, for Operation and Maintenance, and for military construction (including construction and improvement of military family housing) that is obligated to conduct overseas basing activities during fiscal year 1994 may not exceed $16,915,400,000 (such amount being the amount appropriated for such purposes for fiscal year 1993 reduced by $3,300,000,000), except to the extent provided by the Secretary of Defense under paragraph (3).

(2) For purposes of this subsection, the term "overseas basing activities" means the activities of the Department of Defense for which funds are provided through appropriations for Military Personnel, for Operation and Maintenance (including appropriations for family housing operations), and for military construction (including construction and improvement of military family housing) for the payment of costs for Department of Defense overseas military units and the costs for all dependents who accompany Department of Defense personnel outside the United States.

(3) The Secretary of Defense may increase the amount of the limitation under paragraph (1) by such amount or amounts as the Secretary determines to be necessary in the national interest, but not to exceed a total increase of $582,700,000. The Secretary may not increase the amount of such limitation under the preceding sentence until the Secretary provides notice to Congress of the Secretary's intent to authorize such an increase and a period of 15 days elapses after the day on which such notice is provided.

(e) ALLOCATIONS OF SAVINGS.—Any amounts appropriated to the Department of Defense for fiscal year 1994 for the purposes covered by subsection (d)(1) that are not available to be used for those purposes by reason of the limitation in that subsection shall be allocated by the Secretary of Defense for operation and maintenance and for military construction activities of the Department of Defense at military installations and facilities located inside the United States.

(b) CLERICAL AMENDMENT.—The table of sections at the beginning of subchapter II of such chapter is amended by adding at the end the following new item:

"2350j. Burden sharing contributions by designated countries and regional organizations."

Subtitle B—North Atlantic Treaty Organization

SEC. 1411. FINDINGS, SENSE OF CONGRESS, AND REPORT REQUIREMENT CONCERNING NORTH ATLANTIC TREATY ORGANIZATION.

(a) FINDINGS.—The Congress makes the following findings:

(1) The North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO) has successfully met the challenge of helping to maintain the peace, security, and freedom of the United States and its NATO allies for more than 40 years.

(2) The national security interests of the United States have been well served by the process of consultation, coordination, and military cooperation in the NATO framework.

(3) Recent history has witnessed radical changes in the international security environment, including the fall of the Berlin Wall, the unification of Germany, the disbanding of the Warsaw Pact and the disintegration of the Soviet Union.

(4) The military threats which NATO was established to deter have greatly diminished with the end of the Cold War.

(5) The post-Cold War security situation continues to present a wide array of challenges to United States national interests, many of which interests the United States shares with its allies in Europe and Canada.

(6) The international community may prove capable of deterring many threats to the common peace if it can respond decisively to aggression.

(7) The United States must share the responsibilities and the burdens of pursuing international security and stability with other nations.

(8) Several of the newly democratic nations of Central and Eastern Europe and the former Soviet Union have expressed interest in seeking membership in NATO.

(9) Many of the security challenges facing the post-Cold War world would be best handled through coherent multilateral responses.

(10) The United States should never send its military forces into combat unless they are provided with the best opportunity to accomplish their objectives with as little risk as possible.

(11) Military interventions against antagonistic armed forces cannot be conducted safely or effectively on a multilateral basis unless such operations are jointly planned in advance and are executed by units which have trained together and are familiar with each others' operational procedures.

(12) NATO is currently the only organization with the experience, trained staff, and infrastructure necessary to support military cooperation with the major military allies of the United States.

(13) The NATO allies already have volunteered to consider requests from the United Nations and the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe for assistance in maintaining the peace.

(14) Justification of the relevance of NATO in the post-Cold War world will depend largely upon the alliance's ability to adapt its mission, area of responsibility, and procedures to the new security environment.

(15) Justification of future United States support for the alliance and for a United States military presence in Europe will depend upon NATO's ability to address those security interests which the United States shares with its allies in Europe and Canada.

(16) The meeting of the NATO heads of state scheduled for January 1994, presents an excellent opportunity for the President to articulate a new, broader security mission for the alliance in the post-Cold War world, one which will enable it to address a wider array of threats to its members' interests and which will help to share more effectively the burden of international security requirements.

(b) SENSE OF CONGRESS.—It is the sense of the Congress that—

(1) old threats to the security of the United States and its allies in the North Atlantic Treaty Organization having greatly diminished, and new, more diverse challenges having arisen (including ethno-religious conflict in Central and Eastern Europe and the former Soviet Union and the proliferation of weapons of mass destruction in regions proximate to alliance territory), NATO's mission must be redefined so that it may respond to such challenges to its members' security even when those challenges emanate from beyond the geographic boundaries of its members' territories;

(2) NATO should review its consultative mechanisms in order to maximize its ability to marshal political, diplomatic, social, and economic solidarity, buttressed by credible military capability, and to bring the full weight and scope of its cooperative efforts to bear in addressing the new challenges; and

(3) future United States military involvement in, and contributions to, NATO should be determined in relation to the alliance's success or failure in adapting itself to confronting the challenges of the post-Cold War world.

(c) REPORT.—Not later than 30 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, the President shall transmit a report to the Committee on Armed Services and the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate and the Committee on Armed Services and the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House of Representatives. The report shall contain recommendations on the following:

(1) The manner in which NATO can formulate and implement a strategy to address the new, more disparate threats to the security of its members.

(2) The manner in which NATO should continue to adapt its consultative process, including efforts to extend that process to the new democracies of Central and Eastern Europe and the former Soviet Union, so as to enhance its political, diplomatic, social, economic, and military efforts to project stability eastward and maximize its capabilities in crisis prevention and crisis management.

(3) The feasibility of having NATO conduct security operations beyond the geographic boundaries of the alliance.

(4) The manner in which NATO should restructure its forces, training and equipment for the new security environment, including with regard to multinational peacekeeping activities.

(5) The desirability of expanding the alliance to include traditionally neutral nations or the new democratic nations of Central and Eastern Europe and the former Soviet Union that wish to join NATO.

(6) The proper size and composition of United States forces to be deployed in Europe to assist in the implementation of NATO's new mandate and possible reduction in United States military deployments in Europe in the event of the alliance's failure to adopt a new mandate.

(7) The structure and organization of NATO headquarters, with particular attention to the need to reinvigorate the NATO Military Committee.

(8) The extent to which NATO liaison teams should be assigned to the United Nations and the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe so as to facilitate better coordination among these organizations, especially in regard to crisis prevention and crisis management.

(9) The desirability of having additional NATO forces train in North America in a manner supportive of NATO's proposed new strategy.

(10) The structure of NATO's military command, with particular attention to the need to make NATO's Rapid Reaction Force a credible deterrent to regional aggression.

(11) The levels of United States, European, and Canadian defense budgets and their ability to finance forces consistent with the implementation of NATO's new mandate.

SEC. 1412. MODIFICATION OF CERTAIN REPORT REQUIREMENTS.

(a) BIENNIAL NATO REPORT.—Section 1002(d) of the Department of Defense Authorization Act, 1985 (Public Law 98-525; 22 U.S.C. 1928 note), is amended—

(1) by striking out paragraph (2);

(2) by striking out "(1) Not later than April 1, 1990, and biennially each year thereafter" and inserting in lieu thereof "Not later than April 1 of each even-numbered year"; and

(3) by redesignating subparagraphs (A) and (B) as paragraphs (1) and (2).

(b) REPORT ON ALLIED CONTRIBUTIONS.—Section 1046(e) of the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Years 1992 and 1993 (Public Law 102-190; 105 Stat. 1467; 22 U.S.C. 1928 note) is amended—

(1) by striking out "and" at the end of paragraph (2);

(2) by striking out the period at the end of paragraph (3) and inserting in lieu thereof "and"; and

(3) by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

"(4) specifying the incremental costs to the United States associated with the permanent stationing ashore of United States forces in foreign nations."

(c) FINDING AND SENSE OF CONGRESS.—(1) The Congress finds that the Secretary of Defense did not submit to Congress in a timely manner the report on allied contributions to the common defense required under section 1003(c) of the National Defense Authorization Act, 1985 (Public Law 98-525; 22 U.S.C. 1928 note), to be submitted not later than April 1, 1993.

(2) It is the sense of Congress that the timely submission of such report to Congress each year is essential to the deliberation by Congress concerning the annual defense program.

SEC. 1413. PERMANENT AUTHORITY TO CARRY OUT AWACS MEMORANDA OF UNDERSTANDING.

Section 2350e of title 10, United States Code, is amended by striking out subsection (d).

Subtitle C—Export of Defense Articles

SEC. 1421. EXTENSION OF AUTHORITY FOR CERTAIN FOREIGN GOVERNMENTS TO RECEIVE EXCESS DEFENSE ARTICLES.

Section 516(a)(3) of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961 (22 U.S.C. 2321j(a)(3)) is amended by inserting "or fiscal year 1992" after "fiscal year 1991".

SEC. 1422. REPORT ON EFFECT OF INCREASED USE OF DUAL-USE TECHNOLOGIES ON ABILITY TO CONTROL EXPORTS.

(a) REPORT REQUIREMENT.—Not later than six months after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Secretary of Defense shall submit to Congress a report assessing what effect the increased use of dual-use and commercial technologies and items by the Department of Defense could have on the ability of the United States to control adequately the export of sensitive dual-use and military technologies and items to nations to whom the receipt of such technologies is contrary to United States national security interests.

(b) EFFECT ON DEFENSE PROGRAMS.—The report required by subsection (a) shall include—

(1) an assessment of the national security implications of any lowering of licensing controls on the export of dual-use items and technology, to include an assessment of the effect such lowering of controls could have on operational United States defense programs and capabilities and planned United States defense programs and capabilities;

(2) a description of the steps the Secretary of Defense intends to take to ensure that any decontrol of dual-use items and technology does not place at risk the technology and defense capability lead that the United States currently enjoys; and

(3) a description of the steps the Department of Defense intends to take to mitigate any possible increase in the proliferation threat resulting from decontrol of dual-use items and technology.

(c) CONSULTATION.—The report required by subsection (a) shall be prepared in consultation with the Director of Central Intelligence.

SEC. 1423. EXTENSION OF LANDMINE EXPORT MORATORIUM.

(a) FINDINGS.—The Congress makes the following findings:

(1) Anti-personnel landmines, which are designed to maim and kill people, have been used indiscriminately in dramatically increasing numbers around the world. Hundreds of thousands of noncombatant civilians, including children, have been the primary victims. Unlike other military weapons, landmines often remain implanted and undiscovered after conflict has ended, causing massive suffering to civilian populations.

(2) Tens of millions of landmines have been strewn in at least 62 countries, often making whole areas uninhabitable. The Department of State estimates that there are more than 10,000,000 landmines in Afghanistan, 9,000,000 in Angola, 4,000,000 in Cambodia, 3,000,000 in Iraqi Kurdistan, and 2,000,000 each in Somalia, Mozambique, and the former Yugoslavia. Hundreds of thousands of landmines were used in conflicts in Central America in the 1980s.

(3) Advanced technologies are being used to manufacture sophisticated mines which can be scattered remotely at a rate of 1,000 per hour. These mines, which are being produced by many industrialized countries, were found in Iraqi arsenals after the Persian Gulf War.

(4) At least 300 types of anti-personnel landmines have been manufactured by at least 44 countries, including the United States. However, the United States is not a major exporter of landmines. During the 10 years from 1983 through 1992, the United States approved 10 licenses for the commercial export of anti-personnel landmines with a total value of $980,000 and the sale under the Foreign Military Sales program of 108,852 anti-personnel landmines.

(5) The United States signed, but has not ratified, the 1980 Convention on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed To Be Excessively Injurious or To Have Indiscriminate Effects. Protocol II of the Convention, otherwise known as the Landmine Protocol, prohibits the indiscriminate use of landmines.

(6) When it signed the 1980 Convention, the United States stated: "We believe that the Convention represents a positive step forward in efforts to minimize injury or damage to the civilian population in time of armed conflict. Our signature of the Convention reflects the general willingness of the United States to adopt practical and reasonable provisions concerning the conduct of military operations, for the purpose of protecting noncombatants."

(7) The United States also indicated that it had supported procedures to enforce compliance, which were omitted from the Convention's final draft. The United States stated: "The United States strongly supported proposals by other countries during the Conference to include special procedures for dealing with compliance matters, and reserves the right to propose at a later date additional procedures and remedies, should this prove necessary, to deal with such problems."

(8) The lack of compliance procedures and other weaknesses have significantly undermined the effectiveness of the Landmine Protocol. Since it entered into force on December 2, 1983, the number of civilians maimed and killed by anti-personnel landmines has multiplied.

(9) Since October 23, 1992, when a one-year moratorium on sales, transfers, and exports by the United States of anti-personnel landmines was enacted into law (in section 1365 of the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1993 (Public Law 102-484; 22 U.S.C. 2778 note), the European Parliament has issued a resolution calling for a five year moratorium on sales, transfers, and exports of anti-personnel landmines and the Government of France has announced that it has ceased all sales, transfers, and exports of anti-personnel landmines.

(10) On December 2, 1993, 10 years will have elapsed since the 1980 Convention entered into force, triggering the right of any party to request a United Nations conference to review the Convention. Amendments to the Landmine Protocol may be considered at that time. A formal request has been made to the United Nations Secretary General for a review conference. With necessary preparations and consultations among governments, a review conference is not expected to be convened before late 1994 or early 1995.

(1) The United States should continue to set an example for other countries in such negotiations by extending the moratorium on sales, transfers, and exports of anti-personnel landmines for an additional three years. A moratorium of that duration would extend the prohibition on the sale, transfer, and export of anti-personnel landmines a sufficient time to take into account the results of a United Nations review conference.

(b) STATEMENT OF POLICY.—

(1) It is the policy of the United States to seek verifiable international agreements prohibiting the sale, transfer or export, and further limiting the manufacture, possession and use, of anti-personnel landmines.

(2) It is the sense of the Congress that—

(A) the President should submit the 1980 Convention on Certain Conventional Weapons to the Senate for ratification; and

(B) the United States should—

(1) participate in a United Nations conference to review the Landmine Protocol; and

(2) actively seek to negotiate under United Nations auspices a modification of the Landmine Protocol, or another international agreement, to prohibit the sale, transfer, or export of anti-personnel landmines and to further limit the manufacture, possession, and use of anti-personnel landmines.

(c) THREE-YEAR EXTENSION OF LANDMINE MORATORIUM.—Section 1365(c) of the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1993 (Public Law 102-484; 22 U.S.C. 2778 note) is amended by striking out "For a period of one year beginning on the date of the enactment of this Act" and inserting in lieu thereof "During the four-year period beginning on October 23, 1992".

(d) DEFINITION.—For purposes of this section, the term "anti-personnel landmine" means any of the following:

(1) Any munition placed under, on, or near the ground or other surface area, or delivered by artillery, rocket, mortar, or similar means or dropped from an aircraft and which is designed to be detonated or exploded by the presence, proximity, or contact of a person.

(2) Any device or material which is designed, constructed, or adapted to kill or injure and which functions unexpectedly when a person disturbs or approaches an apparently harmless object or performs an apparently safe act.

(3) Any manually-emplaced munition or device designed to kill, injure, or damage and which is actuated by remote control or automatically after a lapse of time.

(a) LIMITATION ON SOURCE OF FUNDS FOR NEW UNITED STATES DIPLOMATIC FACILITIES.—(1) As of January 1, 1995, the United States may not purchase, construct, lease, or otherwise occupy any facility as an embassy, chancery, or consular facility in Germany unless that facility is purchased, constructed, modified, or leased with funds provided by the Government of Germany as an offset for the value of facilities returned by the United States Government to the Government of Germany pursuant to Article 52 of the Status-of-Forces Agreement with the Government of Germany in effect on the date of the enactment of this Act.

SEC. 1433. CONSENT OF CONGRESS TO SERVICE BY RETIRED MEMBERS IN MILITARY FORCES OF NEWLY DEMOCRATIC NATIONS.

(a) FINDINGS.—The Congress makes the following findings:

(1) It is in the national security interest of the United States to promote democracy throughout the world.

(2) The armed forces of newly democratic nations often lack the democratic traditions that are a hallmark of the Armed Forces of the United States.

(3) The understanding of military roles and missions in a democracy is essential for the development and preservation of democratic forms of government.

(4) The service of retired members of the Armed Forces of the United States in the armed forces of newly democratic nations could lead to a better understanding of military roles and missions in a democracy.

(b) CONSENT OF CONGRESS.—(1) Chapter 53 of title 10, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following new section:

"§ 1058. Military service of retired members with newly democratic nations: consent of Congress

"(a) CONSENT OF CONGRESS.—Subject to subsection (b), Congress consents to a retired member of the uniformed services—

"(1) accepting employment by, or holding an office or position in, the military forces of a newly democratic nation; and

"(2) accepting compensation associated with such employment, office, or position.

"(b) APPROVAL REQUIRED.—The consent provided in subsection (a) for a retired member of the uniformed services to accept employment or hold an office or position shall apply to a retired member only if the Secretary concerned and the Secretary of State jointly approve the employment or the holding of such office or position.

"(d) REPORTS TO CONGRESSIONAL COMMITTEES.—The Secretary concerned and the Secretary of State shall notify the Committee on Armed Services and the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate and the Committee on Armed Services and the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House of Representatives of each approval under subsection (b) and each determination under subsection (c).

"(f) RETIRED MEMBER DEFINED.—In this section, the term 'retired member' means a member or former member of the uniformed services who is entitled to receive retired or retainer pay.

"(g) CIVIL EMPLOYMENT BY FOREIGN GOVERNMENTS.—For a provision of law providing the consent of Congress to civil employment by foreign governments, see section 908 of title 37."

(1) the United States Government has not made adequate efforts to seek the payment of compensation by the Government of Peru for the death and injuries to United States military personnel resulting from the attack by aircraft of the military forces of Peru on April 24, 1992, against a United States Air Force C-130 aircraft operating off the coast of Peru; and

(2) in failing to make such efforts adequately, the United States Government has failed in its obligation to support the servicemen and their families involved in the incident and generally to support members of the Armed Forces carrying out missions on behalf of the United States.

(b) SEMIANNUAL REPORT.—Not later than December 1 and June 1 of each year, the Secretary of Defense shall submit to the Committees on Armed Services and Foreign Affairs of the House of Representatives and the Committees on Armed Services and Foreign Relations of the Senate a report on the efforts made by the Government of the United States during the preceding six-month period to seek the payment of fair and equitable compensation by the Government of Peru (1) to the survivors of Master Sergeant Joseph Beard, Jr., United States Air Force, who was killed in the attack described in subsection (a), and (2) to the other crew members who were wounded in the attack and survived.

Subtitle B—International Nonproliferation Activities

SEC. 1611. NUCLEAR NONPROLIFERATION.

(a) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds the following:

(1) The United States has been seeking to contain the spread of nuclear weapons technology and materials.

(2) With the end of the Cold War and the breakup of the Soviet Union, the proliferation of nuclear weapons is now a leading military threat to the national security of the United States and its allies.

(3) The United Nations Security Council declared on January 31, 1992, that "proliferation of all weapons of mass destruction constitutes a threat to international peace and security" and committed to taking appropriate action to prevent proliferation from occurring.

(4) Aside from the five declared nuclear weapon states, a number of other nations have or are pursuing nuclear weapons capabilities.

(5) The IAEA is a valuable international institution to counter proliferation, but the effectiveness of its system to safeguard nuclear materials may be adversely affected by financial constraints.

(6) The Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty codifies world consensus against further nuclear proliferation and is scheduled for review and extension in 1995.

(7) The Nuclear Nonproliferation Act of 1978 declared that the United States is committed to continued strong support for the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty and to a strengthened and more effective IAEA, and established that it is United States policy to establish more effective controls over the transfer of nuclear equipment, materials, and technology.

(b) COMPREHENSIVE NUCLEAR NON-PROLIFERATION POLICY.—In order to end nuclear proliferation and reduce current nuclear arsenals and supplies of weapons-usable nuclear materials, it should be the policy of the United States to pursue a comprehensive policy to end the further spread of nuclear weapons capability, roll back nuclear proliferation where it has occurred, and prevent the use of nuclear weapons anywhere in the world, with the following additional objectives:

(1) Successful conclusion of all pending nuclear arms control and disarmament agreements with all the republics of the former Soviet Union and their secure implementation.

(2) Full participation by all the republics of the former Soviet Union in all multilateral nuclear nonproliferation efforts and acceptance of IAEA safeguards on all their nuclear facilities.

(3) Strengthening of United States and international support to the IAEA so that the IAEA has the technical, financial, and political resources to verify that countries are complying with their nonproliferation commitments.

(4) Strengthening of nuclear export controls in the United States and other nuclear supplier nations, impose sanctions on individuals, companies, and countries which contribute to nuclear proliferation, and provide increased public information on nuclear export licenses approved in the United States.

(5) Reduction in incentives for countries to pursue the acquisition of nuclear weapons by seeking to reduce regional tensions and to strengthen regional security agreements, and encourage the United Nations Security Council to increase its role in enforcing international nuclear nonproliferation agreements.

(6) Support for the indefinite extension of the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty at the 1995 conference to review and extend that treaty and seek to ensure that all countries sign the treaty or participate in a comparable international regime for monitoring and safeguarding nuclear facilities and materials.

(7) Reaching agreement with the Russian Federation to end the production of new types of nuclear warheads.

(8) Pursuing, once the START I treaty and the START II treaty are ratified by all parties, a multilateral agreement to significantly reduce the strategic nuclear arsenals of the United States and the Russian Federation to below the levels of the START II treaty, with lower levels for the United Kingdom, France, and the People's Republic of China.

(9) Reaching immediate agreement with the Russian Federation to halt permanently the production of fissile material for weapons purposes, and working to achieve worldwide agreements to—

(A) end in the shortest possible time the production of weapons-usable fissile material;

(B) place existing stockpiles of such materials under bilateral or international controls; and

(C) require countries to place all of their nuclear facilities dedicated to peaceful purposes under IAEA safeguards.

(10) Strengthening IAEA safeguards to more effectively verify that countries are complying with their nonproliferation commitments and provide the IAEA with the political, technical, and financial support necessary to implement the necessary safeguard reforms.

(11) Conclusion of a multilateral comprehensive nuclear test ban treaty.

(c) REQUIREMENTS FOR IMPLEMENTATION OF POLICY.—(1) Not later than 180 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, the President shall submit to the Congress a report, in unclassified form, with a classified appendix if necessary, on the actions the United States has taken and the actions the United States plans to take during the succeeding 12-month period to implement each of the policy objectives set forth in this section.

(2) Not later than 180 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, the President shall submit to the Congress a report in unclassified form, with a classified appendix if necessary, which—

(A) addresses the implications of the adoption by the United States of a policy of non-first-use of nuclear weapons;

(B) addresses the implications of an agreement with the other nuclear weapons states to adopt such a policy; and

(C) addresses the implications of a verifiable bilateral agreement with the Russian Federation under which both countries withdraw from their arsenals and dismantle all tactical nuclear weapons, and seek to extend to all nuclear weapons states this zero option for tactical nuclear weapons.

(d) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of this section:

(1) The term "IAEA" means the International Atomic Energy Agency.

(2) The term "IAEA safeguards" means the safeguards set forth in an agreement between a country and the IAEA, as authorized by Article III(A)(5) of the Statute of the International Atomic Energy Agency.

(3) The term "non-nuclear weapon state" means any country that is not a nuclear weapon state.

(4) The term "Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty" means the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons, signed at Washington, London, and Moscow on July 1, 1968.

(5) The term "nuclear weapon state" means any country that is a nuclear-weapon state, as defined by Article IX(3) of the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons, signed at Washington, London, and Moscow on July 1, 1968.

(6) The term "weapons-usable fissile materials" means highly enriched uranium and separated or reprocessed plutonium.

(7) The term "policy of no first use of nuclear weapons" means a commitment not to initiate the use of nuclear weapons.

(8) The term "START II treaty" means the Treaty on Further Reductions and Limitations of Strategic Offensive Arms, signed by the United States and the Russian Federation on January 3, 1993.

SEC. 1612. CONDITION ON ASSISTANCE TO RUSSIA FOR CONSTRUCTION OF PLUTONIUM STORAGE FACILITY.

(a) LIMITATION.—Until a certification under subsection (b) is made, no funds may be obligated or expended by the United States for the purpose of assisting the Ministry of Atomic Energy of Russia to construct a storage facility for surplus plutonium from dismantled weapons.

(b) CERTIFICATION OF RUSSIA'S COMMITMENT TO HALT CHEMICAL SEPARATION OF WEAPON-GRADE PLUTONIUM.—The prohibition in subsection (a) shall cease to apply upon a certification by the President to Congress that Russia—

(1) is committed to halting the chemical separation of weapon-grade plutonium from spent nuclear fuel; and

(2) is taking all practical steps to halt such separation at the earliest possible date.

(c) SENSE OF CONGRESS ON PLUTONIUM POLICY.—It is the sense of Congress that a key objective of the United States with respect to the nonproliferation of nuclear weapons should be to obtain a clear and unequivocal commitment from the Government of Russia that it will (1) cease all production and separation of weapon-grade plutonium, and (2) halt chemical separation of plutonium produced in civil nuclear power reactors.

(d) REPORT.—Not later than June 1, 1994, the President shall submit to Congress a report on the status of efforts by the United States to secure the commitments and achieve the objective described in subsections (b) and (c). The President shall include in the report a discussion of the status of joint efforts by the United States and Russia to replace any remaining Russian plutonium production reactors with alternative power sources or to convert such reactors to operation with alternative fuels that would permit their operation without generating weapon-grade plutonium.

SEC. 1613. NORTH KOREA AND THE TREATY ON THE NON-PROLIFERATION OF NUCLEAR WEAPONS.

(a) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds the following:

(1) The Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons, to which 156 states are party, is the cornerstone of the international nuclear nonproliferation regime.

(2) Any nonnuclear weapon state that is a party to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons is obligated to accept International Atomic Energy Agency safeguards on all source or special fissionable material that is within its territory, under its jurisdiction, or carried out under its control anywhere.

(3) The International Atomic Energy Agency is permitted to conduct inspections in a nonnuclear weapon state that is a party to the Treaty at any site, whether or not declared by that state, to ensure that all source or special fissionable material in that state is under safeguards.

(4) North Korea acceded to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons as a nonnuclear weapons state in December 1985.

(5) North Korea, after acceding to that treaty, refused until 1992 to accept International Atomic Energy Agency safeguards as required under the treaty.

(6) Inspections of North Korea's nuclear materials by the International Atomic Energy Agency suggested discrepancies in North Korea's declarations regarding special nuclear materials.

(7) North Korea has not given a scientifically satisfactory explanation for those discrepancies.

(8) North Korea refused to provide International Atomic Energy Agency inspectors with full access to two sites for the purposes of verifying its compliance with the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons.

(9) When called upon by the International Atomic Energy Agency to provide such full access as required by the Treaty, North Korea announced its intention to withdraw from the Treaty, effective after the required three months notice.

(10) After intensive negotiations with the United States, North Korea agreed to suspend its intention to withdraw from the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons and begin consultations with the International Atomic Energy Agency on providing access to its suspect sites.

(11) In an attempt to persuade North Korea to abandon its nuclear weapons program, the United States has offered to discuss with North Korea specific incentives that could be provided for North Korea once (A) outstanding inspection issues between North Korea and the International Atomic Energy Agency are resolved, and (B) progress is made in bilateral talks between North Korea and South Korea.

(b) CONGRESSIONAL STATEMENTS.—The Congress—

(1) notes that the continued refusal of North Korea nearly eight years after ratification of the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons to fully accept International Atomic Energy Agency safeguards raises serious questions regarding a possible North Korean nuclear weapons program;

(2) notes that possession by North Korea of nuclear weapons (A) would threaten peace and stability in Asia, (B) would jeopardize the existing nuclear non-proliferation regime, and (C) would undermine the goal of the United States to extend the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons at the 1995 review conference;

(3) urges continued pressure from the President, United States allies, and the United Nations Security Council on North Korea to adhere to the Treaty and provide full access to the International Atomic Energy Agency in the shortest time possible;

(4) urges the President, United States allies, and the United Nations Security Council to press for continued talks between North Korea and South Korea on denuclearization of the Korean peninsula;

(5) urges that no trade, financial, or other economic benefits be provided to North Korea by the United States or United States allies until North Korea has (A) provided full access to the International Atomic Energy Agency, (B) satisfactorily explained any discrepancies in its declarations of bomb-grade material, and (C) fully demonstrated that it does not have or seek a nuclear weapons capability; and

(6) calls on the President and the international community to take steps to strengthen the international nuclear non-proliferation regime.

SEC. 1614. SENSE OF CONGRESS RELATING TO THE PROLIFERATION OF SPACE LAUNCH VEHICLE TECHNOLOGIES.

(a) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds the following:

(1) The United States has joined with other nations in the Missile Technology Control Regime (MTCR), which restricts the transfer of missiles or equipment or technology that could contribute to the design, development, or production of missiles capable of delivering weapons of mass destruction.

(2) Missile technology is indistinguishable from, and interchangeable with, space launch vehicle technology.

(3) Transfers of missile technology or space launch vehicle technology cannot be safeguarded in a manner that would provide timely warning of diversion for military purposes.

(4) It has been United States policy since agreeing to the guidelines of the Missile Technology Control Regime to treat the sale or transfer of space launch vehicle technology as restrictively as the sale or transfer of missile technology.

(5) Previous congressional action on missile proliferation, notably title XVII of the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1991 (Public Law 101-510; 104 Stat. 1738), has explicitly supported the policy described in paragraph (4) through such actions as the statutory definition of the term "missile" to mean "a category I system as defined in the MTCR Annex, and any other unmanned delivery system of similar capability, as well as the specially designed production facilities for these systems".

(6) There is strong evidence that emerging national space launch programs in the Third World are not economically viable.

(7) The United States has been successful in dissuading other countries from pursuing space launch vehicle programs in part by offering to cooperate with those countries in other areas of space science and technology.

(8) The United States has successfully dissuaded other MTCR adherents, and countries who have agreed to abide by MTCR guidelines, from providing assistance to emerging national space launch programs in the Third World.

(b) STRICT INTERPRETATION OF MTCR.—The Congress supports the strict interpretation by the United States of the Missile Technology Control Regime concerning—

(1) the inability to distinguish space launch vehicle technology from missile technology under the regime; and

(2) the inability to safeguard space launch vehicle technology in a manner that would provide timely warning of the diversion of such technology to military purposes.

(c) SENSE OF CONGRESS.—It is the sense of Congress that the United States Government and the governments of other nations adhering to the Missile Technology Control Regime should be recognized by the international community for—

(1) the success of those governments in restricting the export of space launch vehicle technology and of missile technology; and

(2) the significant contribution made by the imposition of such restrictions to reducing the proliferation of missile technology capable of being used to deliver weapons of mass destruction.

(d) DEFINITION.—For purposes of this section, the term "Missile Technology Control Regime" or "MTCR" means the policy statement, between the United States, the United Kingdom, the Federal Republic of Germany, France, Italy, Canada, and Japan, announced on April 16, 1987, to restrict sensitive missile-relevant transfers based on the MTCR Annex, and any amendments thereto.

(1) The quantities, characteristics, and capabilities of fielded chemical and biological defense equipment to meet wartime and peacetime requirements for support of the Armed Forces, including individual protective items.

(2) The status of research and development programs, and acquisition programs, for required improvements in chemical and biological defense equipment and medical treatment, including an assessment of the ability of the Department of Defense and the industrial base to meet those requirements.

(3) Measures taken to ensure the integration of requirements for chemical and biological defense equipment and material among the Armed Forces.

(4) The status of nuclear, biological, and chemical (NBC) warfare defense training and readiness among the Armed Forces and measures being taken to include realistic nuclear, biological, and chemical warfare simulations in war games, battle simulations, and training exercises.

SEC. 1704. SENSE OF CONGRESS CONCERNING FEDERAL EMERGENCY PLANNING FOR RESPONSE TO TERRORIST THREATS.

It is the sense of Congress that the President should strengthen Federal interagency emergency planning by the Federal Emergency Management Agency and other appropriate Federal, State, and local agencies for development of a capability for early detection and warning of and response to—

(1) potential terrorist use of chemical or biological agents or weapons; and

(2) emergencies or natural disasters involving industrial chemicals or the widespread outbreak of disease.

TITLE XXIX—DEFENSE BASE CLOSURE AND REALIGNMENT

Subtitle A—Base Closure Community Assistance

SEC. 2901. FINDINGS.

Congress makes the following findings:

(1) The closure and realignment of military installations within the United States is a necessary consequence of the end of the Cold War and of changed United States national security requirements.

(2) A military installation is a significant source of employment for many communities, and the closure or realignment of an installation may cause economic hardship for such communities.

(3) It is in the interest of the United States that the Federal Government facilitate the economic recovery of communities that experience adverse economic circumstances as a result of the closure or realignment of a military installation.

(4) It is in the interest of the United States that the Federal Government assist communities that experience adverse economic circumstances as a result of the closure of military installations by working with such communities to identify and implement means of reutilizing or redeveloping such installations in a beneficial manner or of otherwise revitalizing such communities and the economies of such communities.

(5) The Federal Government may best identify and implement such means by requiring that the head of each department or agency of the Federal Government having jurisdiction over a matter arising out of the closure of a military installation under a base closure law, or the reutilization and redevelopment of such an installation, designate for each installation to be closed an individual in such department or agency who shall provide information and assistance to the transition coordinator for the installation designated under section 2915 on the assistance, programs, or other activities of such department or agency with respect to the closure or reutilization and redevelopment of the installation.

(6) The Federal Government may also provide such assistance by accelerating environmental restoration at military installations to be closed, and by closing such installations, in a manner that best ensures the beneficial reutilization and redevelopment of such installations by such communities.

(7) The Federal Government may best contribute to such reutilization and redevelopment by making available real and personal property at military installations to be closed to communities affected by such closures on a timely basis, and, if appropriate, at less than fair market value.

JOINT EXPLANATORY STATEMENT OF THE COMMITTEE OF CONFERENCE

The managers on the part of the House and the Senate at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 2401) to authorize appropriations for fiscal year 1994 for military activities of the Department of Defense, for military construction, and for defense activities of the Department of Energy, to prescribe personnel strengths for such fiscal year for the armed forces, and for other purposes, submit the following joint statement to the House and the Senate in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the managers and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

The Senate amendment struck out all of the House bill after the enacting clause and inserted a substitute text.

The House recedes from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate with an amendment which is a substitute for the House bill and the Senate amendment. The differences between the House bill, the Senate amendment, and the substitute agreed to in conference are noted below, except for clerical corrections, conforming changes made necessary by agreements reached by the conferees, and minor drafting and clarifying changes.

SUMMARY STATEMENT OF CONFERENCE ACTION

The conferees recommend authorizations for the Department of Defense for procurement, research and development, test and evaluation, operation and maintenance, working capital funds, military construction and family housing, weapons, programs of the Department of Energy, and civil defense that have a budget authority implication of $260.9 billion.

SUMMARY TABLE OF AUTHORIZATIONS

The defense authorization act provides authorizations for appropriations but does not generally provide budget authority. Budget authority is generally provided in appropriation acts.

In order to relate the conference recommendations to the Budget Resolution, matters in addition to the dollar authorizations contained in this bill must be taken into account. A number of programs in the defense function are authorized permanently or, in certain instances, authorized in other annual legislation. In addition, this authorization bill would establish personnel levels and include a number of legislative provisions affecting military compensation.

The following table summarizes authorizations included in the bill for fiscal year 1994 and, in addition, summarizes the implication of the conference action for the budget totals for national defense (budget function 050).

Congressional defense committees

The term "congressional defense committees" is often used in this statement of the managers. It means the Committees on Armed Services and the Committees on Appropriations of the Senate and House of Representatives.

Defense budget reductions

The authorizations in this bill for military personnel, operation and maintenance, research and development, military construction, family housing, and the defense activities of the Department of Energy are all lower than those contained in either the House bill or the Senate amendment.

The conferees emphasize that they do not support all the additional reductions they were forced to make in this conference report. Unfortunately, the conferees were required to make these reductions in light of the severe pressure on the defense budget this year, especially with respect to outlays.

The conferees were forced to reduce outlays below the level requested by the President by $3 billion, despite the fact that the Budget Resolution for fiscal year 1994 approved both the budget authority and outlay levels requested by the President for the national defense function.

A large part of this outlay reduction resulted from a scorekeeping dispute between the executive and legislative branches. The conferees are disappointed that, despite their repeated efforts to forge a constructive dialogue to resolve this problem, none of the parties responsible for making and enforcing scorekeeping decisions in the executive or legislative branch joined the conferees in this effort.

Arms control compliance

The budget request contained $305.5 million for arms control-related programs.

The House bill would authorize $305.5 million.

The Senate amendment would authorize $268.7 million.

Based on thorough consultations with officials from the Office of the Secretary of Defense, the military services, and the On-Site Inspection Agency (OSIA), the conferees recommend several adjustments to the budget request. The adjustments reflect delays in the anticipated date of entry into force of the Strategic Arms Reduction Treaty (START) and changes in the implementation schedules of other arms control treaties and agreements. The adjustments result in reductions to the budget request of $10.7 million in procurement, $2.0 million in research and development, $0.2 million in military construction, and $30.1 million in operation and maintenance accounts.

The Department of Defense funds most of the costs of implementing arms control agreements to which the United States is a party. Recently concluded arms control agreements have included the creation of consultative commissions or groups that allow treaties to operate provisionally prior to entry into force. The commissions and groups promote the objectives and implementation of treaty provisions, and discuss and resolve questions or problems that may arise relating to compliance with, questions or problems that may arise relating to compliance with, or possible circumvention, of treaties. Additionally, these commissions and groups can recommend technical changes and amendments to the treaties which could increase the costs of implementing the treaties.

The conferees request that the Department of Defense notify the congressional defense committees 30 days prior to U.S. agreement to any recommendations made by the various commissions and groups that would result in changes to the treaties that would affect the inspection and monitoring provisions, or that would increase the costs of implementation. The advance notification should include information on the effect of the changes and their contribution to U.S. national security.

Management of tactical reconnaissance programs

The conferees are alarmed by the military departments' failed attempts to develop a tactical level reconnaissance capability. These problems are discussed in various other sections of this statement of the managers. Although the Cold War is over, tactical reconnaissance is relatively more important to national security than at any time in history. The proliferation of sophisticated weapons on the international market, reduced budgets and force levels, and the imperative of operating jointly places a premium on having this tactical reconnaissance capability.

Therefore, the conferees believe that it is time for a bold, new approach. The Department of Defense must bring management attention, order, and efficiency to improving tactical reconnaissance capabilities. The conferees direct the Under Secretary of Defense for Acquisition and Technology to create a new acquisition executive position to oversee a single, integrated tactical reconnaissance office (TRO). The conferees envision that the TRO would complement the existing National Reconnaissance Office (NRO), but would focus on aerial reconnaissance missions at the theater-level and below to support the combatant commands.

The conferees believe that the TRO could replace the current disparate activities and incorporate minor elements, as necessary, from existing program offices, such as the unmanned aerial vehicle (UAV) joint program office (JPO). The conferees believe such an organization should be small and streamlined.

The conferees direct that the TRO manage the consolidated development and procurement efforts for both manned and unmanned tactical airborne reconnaissance, sensor development, and ground station support. The consolidation should reduce overhead and increase commonality. For example, although there are numerous manned and unmanned collection systems (U-2, RC-135, EP-3, ES-3, RC-12, F/A-18D (RC), and short-range and tactical endurance UAVs), the conferees see no reason to maintain or develop entirely separate sensor packages or separate ground stations for each system. The office should work closely with the Assistant Secretary of Defense for Command, Control, Communications, and Intelligence, NRO, Defense Support Program Office, Central Imagery Office, and National Security Agency to eliminate gaps and duplication and to ensure that forces can operate jointly.

The conferees also encourage the Under Secretary of Defense for Acquisition and Technology to incorporate streamlined acquisition techniques in managing the TRO. The conferees believe that the TRO could use better procedures for faster, more efficient implementation of engineering changes, waivers, and acceptance testing.

The conferees direct the Secretary of Defense to report to the congressional defense and intelligence committees on a proposed tactical reconnaissance office management plan and organizational charter within 60 days after enactment of this act.

Division A—Department of Defense Authorizations

Mark-19 grenade launcher

The budget request included $20.7 million to procure 800 Mark-19 grenade launchers and 3,000 mounts.

The House bill would add $9.6 million in the National Guard and Reserve equipment procurement account for 700 additional grenade launchers.

The Senate amendment would add $15.0 million to procure an additional 1,000 grenade launchers. The Senate report (S. Rept. 103-112) expressed concern about the Army plans for combat, combat support, and combat service support units. The report expressed the belief that the Army should ensure that both active and Reserve components are adequately equipped with the Mark-19 40mm grenade launchers.

The House recedes.

The conferees expect the Army to include funding in the fiscal year 1995 budget request to continue procurement of Mark-19 grenade launchers for the active components as well as the National Guard and Army Reserve.

AMMUNITION, ARMY

Volcano mine system

The House report (H. Rept. 103-200) directed initiation of low rate initial production in fiscal year 1994 of the M87A1 Volcano mine system using $30.0 million authorized and appropriated for Volcano in fiscal year 1993.

The Senate report (S. Rept. 103-112) contained no similar directive.

The conferees agree with the directive contained in the House report.

Small arms industrial base

The Senate report (S. Rept. 103-112) directed the establishment of a blue ribbon panel to develop a plan for preserving the critical elements of the small arms industrial base.

The House report (H. Rept. 103-200) contained no similar directive.

The conferees endorse the concerns and direction in the Senate report.

The conferees are also concerned about the preservation of the nation's munitions industrial base. For that reason, the conferees are pleased that the Department of Defense is already taking steps to address this issue by establishing a working group of Department of Defense and industry personnel. The conferees anticipate that the group will develop policy and budgetary recommendations for meeting current procurement requirements, preserving surge capability, minimizing peacetime operating costs, and retaining the technical and engineering expertise necessary for future munitions development, production, and support. The recommendations should consider a full range of options, including but not limited to, conversion and reconstitution, international sales, removal of antitrust impediments, and the allocation of both research and production funding between public and private elements of the Base. Accordingly, the conferees direct the working group to submit its recommendations to the congressional defense committees at the same time it submits the small arms industrial base blue ribbon panel report.

Other Procurement, Army

Overview

The budget request for fiscal year 1994 contained an authorization of $3,051.3 million for Other Procurement, Army. The House bill would authorize $2,946.4 million. The Senate amendment would authorize $2,864.6 million. The conferees recommend authorization of $2,992.1 million, as delineated in the following table. Torpedoes

The budget request contained: $24.1 million for procurement of MK-46 torpedo modifications; $100.1 million for procurement of 108 MK-48 advanced capability (ADCAP) torpedoes; and $21.4 million to support production engineering efforts for the MK-50 advanced light weight torpedo (ALWT) program and to complete follow-on operational test and evaluation of corrections to problems identified in operational evaluation.

The House bill did not authorize any funds for MK-46 torpedo modifications or MK-48 ADCAP torpedo procurement. The House bill, however, would authorize $21.4 million to procure 24 MK-50 ALWT torpedoes in fiscal year 1994, and $18.0 million in advance procurement for torpedoes in fiscal year 1995.

The Senate amendment would authorize the requested amounts. The House recedes.

The Navy has informed the conferees of a program to develop a hybrid MK-46 torpedo that would use components of the MK-48 ADCAP and MK-50 ALWT torpedoes. Such a hybrid torpedo could be better adapted to shallow water missions. The conferees believe that his program would help support the torpedo production industrial base and make better use of the large MK-46 torpedo inventory. The conferees direct the Secretary of the Navy to pursue this hybrid program and recommend a $21.3 million authorization for this purpose.

ASW targets

The budget request included $17.6 million for antisubmarine warfare (ASW) targets.

The House bill would authorize only $8.0 million for this program. The House report (H. Rept. 103-200) suggested that current ASW targets may not be appropriate for shallow water operations and are not compatible with MK-48 or MK-50 torpedoes. The House report also directed the Secretary of the Navy to include ASW targets appropriate for these requirements in future budget requests.

The Senate amendment would authorize the requested funds.

The conferees agree to authorize $17.6 million for fiscal year 1994, but direct the Secretary of the Navy not to obligate more than $8.0 million until the Secretary provides a plan to the congressional defense committees detailing how the current ASW target programs can be expanded to include supporting MK-48 and MK-50 torpedoes and shallow water ASW training operations.

Torpedo support equipment

The budget request included $37.6 million for torpedo support equipment.

The House bill would provide $24.2 million, a reduction linked to the House recommendations on overall torpedo production.

The Senate amendment would provide the requested amount.

The conferees agree to authorize $37.6 million for torpedo support equipment. The conferees also agree that the Navy should obligate no more than $24.2 million until the Secretary of the Navy provides a plan to the congressional defense committees detailing how the current torpedo support equipment programs can be expanded to include supporting:

- The MK-50 torpedo;
- The MK-46 service life extension program (SLEP);
- The MK-46 hybrid SLEP program; and
- The MK-48/ADCAP torpedo programs.

This plan should also describe how the Navy intends to restructure the support equipment program to reflect torpedo inventories that will be much smaller than those which the Navy planned before the end of the Cold War.

SHIPBUILDING AND CONVERSION, NAVY

Overview

The budget request for fiscal year 1994 contained an authorization of $4,294.7 million for Shipbuilding and Conversion, Navy. The House bill would authorize $4,160.2 million. The Senate amendment would authorize $4,264.6 million. The conferees recommend authorization of $4,265.1 million, as delineated in the following table. Unless noted explicitly in the statement of managers, all changes are made without prejudice.

Guided missile destroyer (DDG-51)

The budget request included $2,642.8 million for buying three Arleigh Burke-class destroyers (DDG-51).

The House bill would authorize $2,546.8 million for this purpose, a $96.0 million reduction. The House report (H. Rept. 103-200) directed the Navy to use militarized computer equipment, tactical displays, and data terminals currently operating at shore sites for outfitting these ships. To replace these, the House report directed the Navy to purchase commercial, off-the-shelf (COTS) equipment and display emulators.

The Senate amendment would authorize $2,612.8 million, a $30.0 million reduction. The Senate report (S. Rept. 102-112) directed the Navy to use refurbished 5"/54 Mark 45 guns from retiring cruisers instead of purchasing new ones.

The conferees agree to provide the requested amount for the DDG-51 program.

The Navy has informed the conferees that the retiring cruisers' 5"/54 Mark 45 guns will not be available soon enough to support the construction schedule of the fiscal year 1994 ships. The Navy intends, however, to use these guns in future destroyer construction.

The Navy has also informed the conferees that shore establishments are already using COTS equipment and display emulators, except in those cases when the militarized equipment is needed for maintenance training, software development, or to provide a battle spare. The conferees believe that the Navy could achieve additional savings, but are concerned that taking precipitous action now could delay the destroyer construction program.

The conferees believe that substantial savings could be realized by utilizing non-militarized equipment at shore activities where there is not a valid need or requirement for militarized equipment. Therefore, the conferrees direct the Secretary of the Navy to develop and implement a plan to use COTS equipment at shore activities to the maximum extent practical. The conferees direct the Navy to provide this plan to the congressional defense committees with the submission of the fiscal year 1995 budget request.

OTHER PROCUREMENT, NAVY

Overview

The budget request for fiscal year 1994 contained an authorization of $2,968.0 million for Other Procurement, Navy. The House bill would authorize $2,861.5 million. The Senate amendment would authorize $2,820.9 million. The conferees recommend authorization of $2,953.6 million, as delineated in the following table. Unless noted explicitly in the statement of managers, all changes are made without prejudice.

AN/BQG-5

Neither the budget request nor the Senate amendment included any funds for AN/BQG-5 wide aperture array (WAA) systems.

The House bill would authorize $50.0 million for the AN/BQG-5 program, including $20.0 million for the completion and installation of a second system and $30.0 million for procurement and installation of a third system. The House report (H. Rept. 103-200) expressed support for the Navy's initiatives to address antisubmarine warfare (ASW) in the shallow water environment. The report also cited the AN/BQG-5 WAA system being installed on the U.S.S. Augusta (SSN-710) as a system that could provide quicker detection, localization, and targeting information in shallow water.

The conferees agree to authorize the funding contained in the House bill. The conferees support the Navy's initiatives in shallow water ASW. The conferees understand that the AN/BQG-5 is a stand-alone subsystem of the AN/BSY-2 combat system on Seawolf submarines. Upon completion of the Seawolf program, and with this authorization, the Navy will have bought and installed six AN/BQG-5 WAA systems. The conferees believe that six AN/BQG-5 systems are sufficient to meet near-term shallow water ASW concerns. The conferees will consider Navy requests for additional systems if the Navy requests them in future budget requests.

Towed array sonars

The budget request did not contain funds for surface ship towed array sonars or for including full spectrum processing capability in surface ships for conducting shallow water antisubmarine warfare (ASW).

The House bill would add $10.0 million for this purpose. The House report (H. Rept. 103-200) expressed concern that the Navy is not trying to determine the effectiveness of current surface ship towed arrays in improving shallow water ASW and target classification for those ships not equipped with the AN/SQQ-89 surface ASW combat system.

The Senate bill contained no similar funding.

The Senate recesses.

The conferees are concerned that Navy evaluations of current surface ship towed arrays and full spectrum processing for improving shallow water ASW capability in shallow water operations lack focus. Therefore, the conferees direct the Secretary of the Navy to conduct an at-sea evaluation of the potential ASW and target classification improvements that would be achieved by using current surface towed arrays with full spectrum processors already in the Navy's inventory.

Minesweeping system replacement

The budget request contained $51.7 million for minesweeping system replacement. The House bill and the Senate amendment would approve the requested amount.

The conferees have been concerned about the Navy's mine countermeasures capability for a long time. The conferees believe that the AN/SQQ-32 mine hunting sonar is a critical element in the Navy's mine warfare capabilities. In view of its importance, the conferees believe that expeditious procurement of the last eight systems to satisfy the inventory objectives would reduce program risk.

PROCUREMENT, MARINE CORPS

Overview

The budget request for fiscal year 1994 contained an authorization of $483.5 million for Procurement, Marine Corps. The House bill would authorize $471.0 million. The Senate amendment would authorize $480.5 million. The conferees recommend authorization of $483.6 million, as delineated in the following table. Unless noted explicitly in the statement of managers, all changes are made without prejudice.

Advanced cruise missile (ACM)

The budget request contained $59.4 million for the advanced cruise missile (ACM).

Relying on the availability of unobligated prior year funds, the House bill would provide $19.4 million, while the Senate amendment would provide $5.0 million.

The conferees agree to authorize $5.0 million for the ACM program, and direct the use of unobligated prior year funds for the balance of the request, including the use of such funds for ACM weapons system support requirements.

Defense meteorological satellite program

The Senate report (S. Rept. 103-112) stated that it is not necessary or affordable to maintain separate civil and military weather satellite systems. If a merger of the two systems is not achieved, the Department of Defense should reduce its constellation size from two satellites to one and terminate the long-planned block 6 upgrade. Accordingly, the Senate amendment would reduce the budget request for weather satellite and space booster procurement by $47.4 million to defer the planned launch of a DOD weather satellite in fiscal year 1994.

The House bill and report (H. Rept. 103-200) took no similar action.

The Senate recedes.

The conferees agree that the nation's two weather satellite programs should be consolidated. The President has now formally recommended legislation to Congress requiring this merger. The conferees are encouraged that the Department and the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration (NOAA) have made progress in resolving requirements, management, and funding issues. The conferees note also that the President's Science Advisor, building on the DOD-NOAA efforts, intends to produce a consolidation plan.

The conferees also agree that requested block 6 modernization funds should be used for joint system research and development. The conferees urge the Science Advisor to consider the merits of: (1) halting the procurement of additional NOAA satellites; (2) modifying, as necessary, two DOD satellites instead, which would roughly even out the inventories of the two systems; and (3) using the savings from the planned procurement to achieve improved capabilities in a merged system. The conferees believe that significant funds can be saved even as capabilities are improved, because total constellation size and ground infrastructure can be reduced.

The conferees believe that decisions on management of the merged system should be primarily based on cost and effectiveness. Constellation planning should be based on U.S. military, civil, and commercial interests, first and foremost; where these coincide with those of current or potential international partners, the conferees encourage wider cooperation.

Defense satellite communications system

The budget request included $32.4 million for defense satellite communications system (DSCS) procurement and $134.4 million for medium launch vehicle (MLV) procurement.

The Senate amendment would reduce the amounts requested for these two programs by $12.0 million and $19.4 million, respectively, to defer the launch of a DSCS satellite and to take advantage of prior year savings identified by the General Accounting Office.

The House bill would take no similar action.

The conferees direct the Air Force to defer the launch of a DSCS satellite and agree to reduce the requested amount for DSCS by $7.0 million. The conferees further agree to restore all but $2.1 million of the requested amount for the MLV.

OTHER PROCUREMENT, AIR FORCE

Overview

The budget request for fiscal year 1994 contained an authorization of $7,942.1 million for Other Procurement, Air Force. The House bill would authorize $7,621.8 million. The Senate amendment would authorize $7,610.9 million. The conferees recommend authorization of $7,524.6 million, as delineated in the following table. Unless noted explicitly in the statement of managers, all changes are made without prejudice.

Table with multiple columns and rows, containing numerical data and text labels. The text labels are mostly illegible but appear to be item descriptions. The numerical values are arranged in columns, likely representing budget amounts in millions of dollars. The table is organized into sections, with some rows highlighted in bold.

Development test facility

The budget request included $17.5 million to procure a development test facility for the Defense Mapping Agency (DMA).

The House bill approved the requested amount.

The Senate amendment denied the requested amount because this facility would duplicate capabilities in private industry. Therefore, it would be incompatible with the Administration's policy to rely on the private sector where possible.

The conferees agree to reduce the requested amount by $7.5 million without prejudice. The conferees are persuaded that it is necessary for DMA to bring the planning work in-house rather than continue to try to contract it out. The conferees understand, however, that the effort is now expected to cost less than originally forecast.

Landsat Earth Resources Satellite

Last year, the Department of Defense assumed responsibility for acquiring and operating the space segment of the Landsat earth resources system, while the National Aeronautics and Space Administration (NASA) assumed responsibility for the ground segment.

The defense budget request included substantial funds to continue development of an adjunct payload on the next Landsat satellite. This sensor, known as the high resolution multispectral imager (HRMSI), will provide improved resolution and a tasking capability. While this sensor is useful for defense missions, it is also valuable to the civil and commercial sectors.

The NASA budget request included funds for advanced technology that NASA planned to apply to developing the software and hardware needed to process and exploit the data from the HRMSI sensor. Reductions in the NASA budget have eliminated this option, and the recently enacted NASA appropriations bill contained no funding for this program.

The conferees are very concerned about this situation. There is no point in acquiring a satellite sensor that cannot be used. Moreover, the conferees will not permit the defense budget to subsidize another joint program with NASA when NASA does not meet its assigned fiscal responsibilities. The conferees, therefore, direct the Administration to decide which federal agency will fund HRMSI data processing, and include funds for HRMSI data processing in the President's budget request for either NASA or the Department of Defense. If no budget request for HRMSI data processing is received for fiscal year 1995, the conferees agree to terminate future funding for the HRMSI sensor.

Special operations forces procurement

The budget request contained $450.7 million for procurement for the U.S. Special Operations Command.

The House bill and Senate amendment would authorize $436.954 million for this purpose.

The conferees recommend an authorization of $468.454 million for procurement for the U.S. Special Operations Command. The conferees recommend the following additions to the amount authorized by the House bill and the Senate amendment: $1.0 to procure modified M4 carbines; $4.4 million to procure selectable lightweight attack munitions; $6.6 million to procure 25mm enhanced high-explosive incendiary rounds for the AC-130U gunship; $4.5 million to procure interim contract support for several C-130 modification programs; and $15.0 to procure team-level communications equipment.

PROCUREMENT, NATIONAL GUARD AND RESERVE EQUIPMENT

Overview

The budget request for fiscal year 1994 contained no funds for Procurement, National Guard and Reserve Equipment. The House bill would authorize $993.3 million. The Senate amendment would authorize $785.0 million. The conferees recommend authorization of $990.0 million, as delineated in the following table. Unless noted explicitly in the statement of managers, all changes are made without prejudice.

National Guard and Reserve equipment

The budget request included no procurement funds in the National Guard and Reserve equipment account. The request for various procurement accounts included $1,555.7 million which was designated for the Reserve components.

The House bill would authorize $993.3 million specifically for National Guard and Reserve equipment procurement.

The Senate amendment would authorize $785.0 million for these purposes. The Senate report (S. Rept. 103-112) expressed the belief that the end of the Cold War provides an opportunity for the armed forces to make a greater contribution in addressing critical domestic problems. The Senate amendment would provide additional funds for broad categories, including medical equipment, aviation and aeromedical equipment, construction and transportation equipment, and electronic and communications equipment. The Senate report would direct the Chief of the National Guard Bureau and the head of each service reserve component to survey field units to identify the equipment they need to support domestic missions.

The conferees agree to provide $990.0 million for National Guard and Reserve equipment procurement. The conferees agree to provide some of the funds in the broad, generic categories as recommended by the Senate. The conferees direct the Department of Defense to survey the requirements described in the Senate report and to provide a report to the congressional defense committees on the results of that survey before April 15, 1994.

The conferees expect the Secretary of Defense to review these reports to determine whether there may be higher priorities for the funds than the ways they are allocated in this statement of managers. The conferees expect the Secretary to seek a reprogramming of these funds if he believes that there is a more productive way to spend the funds for modernizing the National Guard and Reserves.

CHEMICAL AGENTS AND MUNITIONS DESTRUCTION, DEFENSE

Overview

The budget request for fiscal year 1994 contained an authorization of $125.5 million for Chemical Agents and Munitions Destruction, Defense. The House bill would authorize $114.5 million. The Senate amendment would authorize $442.9 million. The conferees recommend authorization of $379.6 million, as delineated in the following table. Unless noted explicitly in the statement of managers, all changes are made without prejudice.

Reserve components (sec. 106)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 107) that would direct the Secretary of the Army to ensure that, of the total number of multiple launch rocket systems acquired with Army procurement funds, one battalion set shall be made available to the Army National Guard.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

Chemical demilitarization programs (sec. 107)

The budget request included $433.6 million for the chemical demilitarization program. Out of the request, $308.1 million was for Army operation and maintenance (O&M) and $125.5 million was for Army procurement.

The House bill contained provisions that would authorize $114.5 million for procurement (sec. 108) and $308.1 million for operation and maintenance (sec. 301).

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 107) that would authorize $442.9 million for the chemical demilitarization program.

The House recedes with an amendment that would authorize $379.6 million for the chemical demilitarization program. The conferees agree that funds for this program should continue to be provided in a separate DOD account as directed by section 1412(f) of Public Law 99-145 and not in the budget accounts of any military department. Therefore, the conferees transfer the funds contained in the fiscal year 1994 Army budget requests for the chemical demilitarization program to a separate DOD account.

The conferees authorize $26.6 million in research and development funds for the development and testing of equipment to determine its suitability to destroy nonstockpile chemical munitions. In the event additional funds are necessary for research and development of alternative destruction technologies, the conferees will consider a reprogramming request which uses available sources other than those authorized and appropriated for the chemical demilitarization program. The conferees also agree to amend section 151(b) of the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Years 1992 and 1993 to include oversight as a purpose for which the federal government may provide funds through cooperative agreements with states and local governments.

Denial of multiyear procurement authorization (sec. 109)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 110) that would deny the Secretary of the Navy authority to enter into a multiyear procurement contract to procure F-18C/D aircraft.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

Procurement of helicopters (sec. 111)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 111) that would authorize the procurement of 10 AH-64 helicopters, notwithstanding the prohibition contained in section 132(a)(2) of the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1992 (Public Law 101-189). The provision also would authorize the expenditure of up to $225.0 million to procure 36 OH-58D AHIP Scout aircraft, notwithstanding the prohibition contained in the same provision of law.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with regard to AH-64 helicopters.

The Senate also recedes with an amendment to the AHIP Scout aircraft provision.

The conferees agree to authorize $112.5 million to procure 18 OH-58D AHIP Scout aircraft.

Light utility helicopter modernization (sec. 112)

The Department of the Army's fiscal year 1994 budget request did not contain a plan for a specific modernization or replacement of UH-1 helicopters in spite of congressional direction to do so in the statement of managers (H. Rept. 102-966) accompanying the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1993.

The Senate amendment would provide $5.0 million in research and development funds for the Army, in conjunction with the National Guard Bureau, to study the most cost-effective and affordable solution to upgrading the UH-1 fleet.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment. The conferees are disappointed that the Secretary of the Army chose to ignore the fiscal year 1993 congressional direction. Because the conferees have no confidence that the Army will conform with the previous direction, they agree to a provision that would direct the Secretary of the Army to coordinate with the Chief of the National Guard Bureau to conduct a thorough study of light helicopter modernization requirements, including: life cycle costs; capability requirements; and, if required, development of an acquisition strategy—providing for full and open competition—for pursuing a cost-effective modernization program. The conferees direct the Department of the Army to fund this study effort from available resources.

The conferees further direct the Secretary of the Army to submit his recommendations based on this study to the congressional defense committees by April 15, 1994. The provision also would prohibit the obligation of any funds in support of a light helicopter modernization program until 30 days after delivery of the recommendations.

Chemical agent monitor (secs. 113 and 114)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 113) that would prohibit the obligation of funds appropriated for fiscal year 1993 for the procurement of the improved chemical agent monitor (ICAM). The Senate amendment also contained a provision (sec. 112) that would authorize funds appropriated for fiscal year 1993 for the ICAM to be used for the procurement of M40/42 nuclear, biological, and chemical protective masks.

The House bill contained no similar provisions.

The House recedes.

The conferees agree to authorize the fiscal year 1994 request of $1.9 million for the ICAM. The conferees remain concerned with the reliability of the chemical agent monitor (CAM). The conferees direct the Secretary of Defense to study the operation effectiveness of the CAM and ICAM and submit a report on his findings to the congressional defense committees no later than April 1, 1994. The Secretary shall inform the congressional defense committees of the official to whom he has delegated the responsibility of preparing the report 30 days after enactment of this act. The report should include, but not be limited, to the following:

(1) An analysis of the chemical agent monitor's operational effectiveness during Operation Desert Shield/Desert Storm;

(2) Its use in support of the U.N. chemical weapons dismantlement operations in Iraq;

(3) Chemical weapons transportation operations conducted by the U.S. Army's Technical Escort Division;

(4) A comparison of the chemical agent monitor's capabilities during operational use with the specifications outlined in the original and amended required operational capabilities document; and,

(5) An evaluation of the ICAM operational testing.

Close tactical trainer quickstart program (sec. 115)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 114) that would authorize the Department of Defense to reprogram funds to initiate procurement of close tactical trainer simulators in fiscal year 1994, subject to normal reprogramming procedures.

The provision would effectively authorize a new start through reprogramming procedures. The Senate included the provision to permit the Army to begin this program during the fiscal year if the Army could identify offsetting funds. This provision would be required because the budget request did not contain a procurement line item for this program in fiscal year 1994. Normal reprogramming procedures would preclude reprogramming funds in fiscal year 1994, in the absence of a procurement line item in the approved budget.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment.

Attack submarine programs (sec. 121)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 122) that would place several requirements on the Department of Defense regarding attack submarine programs. The provision would require the Secretary of Defense to submit to the congressional defense committees: (1) cost estimates for producing SSN-21 and SSN-22 submarines; (2) the cost and operational effectiveness analysis (COEA) for the new attack submarine program; and (3) a report on how the Department intends to spend the $540.2 million appropriated in fiscal year 1992 for preserving the submarine construction industrial base. The provision would also authorize retroactively the $540.2 million appropriated for this purpose.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment.

The conferees do not recommend legislative restrictions on research and development funding of the new attack submarine because the Department has already delivered a COEA.

The conferees agree to a provision that would limit the obligation of any of the $540.2 million for either advance procurement of long lead items for SSN-23, or settlement of claims arising from cancellation of the Seawolf program last year. The cancellation affected components of SSN-23 and later Seawolf-class ships. If the Navy finds that the Department needs to use some of the $540.2 million for settling these claims, the provision would allow that action. None of these funds, however, could be used for new work on any additional Seawolf-class submarines.

The conferees recognize that the Department has concluded its Bottom-Up Review. The Bottom-Up Review included an analysis of the submarine industrial base that the conferees would rather have had available last year when the Seawolf cancellation was proposed. The results of that analysis apparently confirm that protecting the submarine industrial base is very important.

The Bottom-Up Review has concluded that building the next Seawolf submarine (SSN-23) is the best way to protect the submarine industrial base while the Department develops the next generation attack submarine.

The conferees reserve judgment on reauthorizing SSN-23 until the Secretary of Defense requests an authorization in a future budget that fully funds SSN-23 and includes appropriate termination and close out activities for the Seawolf program.

Trident II missile (sec. 122)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 153) that would provide funding for the Trident II (D-5) missile program and would require the Secretary of Defense to study the options for meeting the START II Treaty limits.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment.

Study of Trident missile submarine programs (sec. 123)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 154) that would require the Secretary of Defense to study the cost-effectiveness of backfitting Trident II missiles into those Trident ballistic missile submarines that now contain Trident I missiles.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

MK-48 ADCAP torpedo (sec. 124)

The budget request included $100.1 million to procure 108 MK-48 advanced capability (ADCAP) torpedoes. The fiscal year 1994 program would be the last year of a three year multiyear procurement for these weapons.

The House bill would provide only $28.1 million for this program and would cancel the multiyear procurement.

The Senate amendment authorized the requested amount.

The House recedes. The conferees believe that new production of the MK-48 ADCAP should be terminated at the conclusion of the current multiyear contract. Therefore, the conferees agree to a provision that would terminate the programs.

SSN acoustics (sec. 125)

The budget request included $27.2 million for attack submarine (SSN) acoustics for fiscal year 1994.

The House bill would not authorize any funds for SSN acoustics. The House report (H. Rept. 1013-200) expressed concern that the Navy does not have a coherent plan for adapting submarine acoustic sensors, including towed arrays, hull-mounted sensors, and active sonar systems, for operations in littoral waters.

The Senate amendment would approve the requested amount.

The conferees agree to provide $27.2 million, but recommend a provision that would restrict obligation of $13.0 million of this amount until the Secretary of the Navy develops a submarine acoustics master plan and provides that plan to the congressional defense committees.

Long-term lease authority for certain vessels (sec. 126)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 123) that would permit the Secretary of the Navy to enter into a long-term lease or charter for a double-hull tanker or oceanographic vessel built with government assistance after enactment of the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1994.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

Long-term lease authority for certain roll-on/roll-off vessels (sec. 127)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 124) that would permit the Secretary of the Navy to enter into long-term leases or charters for up to five roll-on/roll-off vessels.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment.

The conferees agree that the lease authority should not be open-ended. Therefore, the conferees recommend a provision that would terminate this authority on June 15, 1995.

The conferees intend that the Navy be able to use these vessels to preposition material and equipment aboard ships. The conferees do not intend that any vessels leased under this provision be used to compete with commercial carriers that transport peacetime DOD cargoes in their regularly scheduled liner service. The conferees use the phrase "related point-to-point service" to refer to the current practice of: (1) transporting equipment and material aboard ship following delivery of any such material; and (2) using these ships in contingencies, exercises, and humanitarian relief operations. The conferees do not construe the phrase "related point-to-point service" to apply to support for prepositioned equipment and material based on land.

F-14 aircraft upgrade program (sec. 128)

The budget request contained $116.2 million for F-14 aircraft modifications and $72.0 million for development. Both of these requested amounts support an F-14A/B upgrade plan. The Navy has started retiring the A-6 all-weather, medium attack bomber. The Navy intends to upgrade the F-14 fleet to replace some of the strike capability that will be lost with the A-6 retirement. Under the Navy's plan, different portions of the F-14 fleet of "A," "B," and "D" model aircraft would be provided with different capabilities.

The House bill would add $78.0 million to the development request. The House report (H. Rept. 103-200) directed the Navy to cancel the F-14A/B upgrade and replace it with a program to modify existing F-14D aircraft. The report directed the Navy to design a modification that would give F-14D aircraft capabilities equivalent to those of the Air Force F-15E Strike Eagle. The House bill would fully fund the request for modifications.

The Senate amendment would fund the F-14 research and development request, but would add $175.0 million to the modification account. The Senate report (S. Rept. 103-112) directed the Navy to use these funds to begin a modification program to provide F-14 aircraft with an advanced ground attack capability. S0634

The Navy's F-14 strike upgrade plan may have been adequate at the time it was developed. Its aim was to serve as a complement to the A-6, or as an interim bridge to the AFX aircraft. The Navy, however, accelerated plans to retire the A-6 aircraft. The Department has terminated AFX development. Moreover, the so-called joint advanced strike technology (JAST) program is focused on developing technology for use in 2015. Consequently, the Navy probably will not deploy a new strike aircraft before 2015 to 2020. By default, the F-14 will be the Navy's only deep-strike aircraft for many years.

Because of the uncertainty about when a replacement aircraft will be available, the F-14 must have a more robust air-to-ground capability than the Navy plan originally envisioned. The conferees believe that, if power projection from aircraft carriers is to remain viable, the resulting F-14 must provide a capability similar to that provided by the F-15E Strike Eagle.

Accordingly, the conferees agree to provide $150.0 million for research and development funding and direct the Secretary of the Navy to initiate a comprehensive upgrade program to provide F-15E-like capabilities for at least 54 F-14D aircraft as the goal configuration of a building block mix. The conferees believe that such a program must result in an F-14 fleet that has the capability to use modern stand-off, air-to-ground weaponry.

The conferees understand the fiscal constraints on converting the entire F-14 fleet to a single configuration. Nevertheless, the conferees believe that using a "building block" approach will allow the Navy to simultaneously upgrade the disparate F-14 configurations and facilitate ultimate conversion to an F/A-14D if funding permits.

The conferees also agree to provide $165.0 million for long-lead procurement for such items as upgraded engines, self-protection jammers, night vision equipment, and other upgrades which contribute to the transition toward a single, integrated, building block F-14 upgrade program. The conferees direct the Navy to discontinue the F-14A/B upgrade requested in the budget, but expect that the Navy may pursue digital avionics enhancements contained in the original F-14A/B upgrade program as a subset of a building block plan.

The conferees recommend a provision that would restrict obligation of any fiscal year 1994 procurement funds pending delivery of a report to the congressional defense committees on this upgrade program. The Secretary of the Navy would not be able to obligate these funds until 30 days after he provides a report to the congressional defense committees that includes the following information: (1) a description of the F/A-14D (F-15E-like) goal configuration; (2) a schedule for conversion of the current F-14D fleet to the goal configuration; (3) a description of a narrower subset of F-14 configurations which conform to a building block upgrade approach; (4) the total number, by type, of aircraft to be converted; and (5) a funding plan for implementing this upgrade program.

The budget request contained $626.2 million for B-2 bomber procurement and $285.1 million for initial spares.

The House bill and the Senate amendment contained provisions (sec. 151 and sec. 122, respectively) that would fully fund the request. Each provision, however, would place certain limitations on the obligation of these funds. The House bill would limit the obligation of all funds until the Secretary of Defense made numerous certifications, 30 days passed, and an act that would authorize obligation of the funds was enacted. The House bill also would prohibit the development of the GATS/GAMS relative targeting system on the B-2.

The Senate amendment also would limit the obligation of all funds pending receipt of the same certifications, plus the satisfaction of two conditions regarding B-2 warranties and contract definitization. The Senate amendment also contained provisions that would limit the B-2 program to 20 operational aircraft and limit the program's total acquisition cost to $28.968 billion in fiscal year 1981 dollars.

The House recedes with an amendment that would delete the Senate provision that provided for an increase in funds above the program cost cap if certain conditions are met. The conferees, therefore, would restrict the obligation of funds only to contracts or contract modifications, that in the aggregate, limit the government's total B-2 program liability to $28.968 billion (in constant fiscal year 1981 dollars) while providing for no more than 20 deliverable aircraft and appropriate termination costs. The cost cap expressed in constant fiscal year 1981 dollars is equivalent to $44.4 billion in then-year dollars, which is the official Air Force acquisition cost estimate for the planned B-2 program. The conferees expect the Comptroller General to report to the congressional defense committees at regular intervals on the total acquisition costs of the B-2 bomber program through the remainder of the aircraft production program. Therefore, the conferees direct the Secretary of the Air Force to provide the Comptroller General, on a timely basis, such information on B-2 program costs as may be required to conduct an ongoing review of B-2 program costs. The information shall include individual cost breakdowns for research, development, test and evaluation, aircraft procurement, all planned modifications and retrofits, tooling, preplanned product improvements, support equipment, interim contractor support, initial spares, and government liability associated with termination costs and other government costs.

The conferees further agree to allow the Air Force to proceed with a GPS aided targeting system (GATS) for the B-2, consistent with the Secretary of the Air Force's October 5, 1993 letter to the congressional defense committees.

Finally, the conferees agree to release for obligation B-2 bomber procurement funds which were restricted by the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1992 (Public Law 102-190) and the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1993 (Public Law 102-484).

B-1B bomber (secs. 132 and 212)

The budget request contained $213.3 million for procurement and $93.5 million for research, development, test and evaluation (RDT&E) for the B-1B bomber.

The House bill would provide $263.4 million for procurement (sec. 152) and $180.5 million for RDT&E (sec. 223).

The Senate amendment would provide $177.3 million for procurement (sec. 121) and $43.5 million for RDT&E (sec. 213).

The conferees recommend $272.3 million for procurement and $49.0 million for RDT&E for the B-1B bomber program. In addition, the conferees agree to require the Secretary of the Air Force to develop a plan to test B-1B operational readiness rates.

Out of the procurement funds authorized for the B-1B bomber, up to $165.0 million shall be available for interim contractor support (ICS), up to $46.5 million shall be available for deferred logistics support equipment, and up to $20.0 million shall be available to meet the incremental costs above those costs normally covered by operations and support funds for the required test program. Within available funds, the conferees direct that safety-of-flight modifications be fully funded.

Within the RDT&E funds authorized for the B-1B bomber, the Secretary is directed to test the feasibility of implementing the GATS relative targeting system on the B-1B bomber, with particular emphasis on whether the existing B-1B bomber radar is capable of performing sufficiently precise relative targeting without expensive radar modifications. The congressional defense committees expect to be kept fully informed of the results of such tests.

Out of the RDT&E funds authorized for the B-1B bomber, up to $7.2 million may be made available to carry out the Air Force's planned fiscal year 1994 electronic countermeasures (ECM) program, together with up to $31.0 million of unobligated prior year balances. The ECM program should emphasize the exploration of whether existing ECM systems could be adapted relatively quickly and inexpensively into the B-1 platform to provide, at a minimum, at least the same degree of survivability at medium altitude and above as the B-52 enjoys today.

Within the remaining R&D funds, the conferees recommend that, to the extent possible, those modifications necessary for the early incorporation of the JDAM munition on the B-1 bomber be accorded priority in the allocation of funds.

The conferees further agree to recede from all limitations on the obligation of both procurement and RDT&E funding for the B-1B bomber contained in the Senate amendment.

OPERATIONAL READINESS TEST PLAN

The conferees have attempted to break the longstanding impasse between the House of Representatives and the Senate over the B-1 bomber program. The House conferees recognize the need to more clearly define the cost and effectiveness of proposed fixes, upgrades, and conventional weapons integration for the B-1B. The Senate conferees recognize that the B-1B force constitutes an irreplaceable stock of heavy bomber airframes which must be given improved conventional weapons capability in order to meet possible near-term contingencies. The issues for both sets of conferees are to develop options addressing these issues: "How much improvement?" and "What will it cost?" To begin to address these issues, the conferees direct the Secretary of the Air Force to develop and implement a test plan designed to determine whether the Air Force's planned level of B-1B spares, logistics support equipment, and maintenance manning, once attained, will be adequate to achieve the high operational readiness rates required to support the planned use of the B-1 in future conflicts.

The conferees envision concentrating at one base for one B-1 wing the planned level of spares and maintenance support and equipment to observe whether or not, over a period of at least six months, the planned level of support is adequate to produce the planned Air Force operational readiness rate of 75 percent. This is a test of self-contained, on-base sufficiency. Parts and equipment that would normally be repaired at depots or other off-base sites will be sent for repair, and replacements will be provided consistent with planned lead-times. This is not intended to be, and cannot be, a test of depot-level activity.

There are several potential problems with the conduct of such a test. Currently, a large backlog of unrepaired spare parts has arisen as a result of a shortfall in ICS funds. Some months will be required to substantially reduce that backlog, before which a test of the type envisioned would be imprudent. Even with reduced backlogs, the plan to concentrate the planned level of spare parts and other support at one wing will likely require some drawdown in the stocks at the other bases. This, at a minimum, could further reduce readiness levels at non-test bases and, at worst, affect aircrew proficiency at those bases. Also, some B-1 aircraft are undergoing safety-of-flight modifications which affects airframe availability, and the Air Force has a seven-point "reliability and maintainability" (R&M) upgrade program underway. Thus, the B-1 fleet is not homogeneous and the reliability improvements from the R&M program are not yet realized.

The conferees seek an unbiased test. Therefore, the test conditions must broadly represent the fleetwide capability at maturity. While the Air Force should not hand pick the most reliable fleetwide B-1 airframes and transfer them to the test base, the test wing should consist of aircraft with standard ECM configuration, required safety-of-flight modifications completed and, to the extent practicable, major R&M upgrades accomplished.

Similarly, flows of parts and replacement items into and out of the test base in accord with normal maintenance actions are permitted; however, the test should be structured to monitor and detect unauthorized support activities. Both the Office of Operational Test and Evaluation and the GAO should monitor the test phase and review and comment upon the results of the test.

The conferees do not intend or envision this test as a "make-or-break" event; rather, they see it as an inexpensive method of acquiring useful information on a range of future capabilities and costs. If the test demonstrates that planned support levels can sustain the Air Force's planned readiness rates, that would be welcome news. Otherwise the collected data should be able to define the readiness rate that the planned level of support can sustain, and projections of how much additional support would be required to achieve the 75 percent operational readiness goal. This would also provide an estimate of the added cost to provide that increment of support. Also, the data should make clear which specific areas are most troublesome and which areas would, if mitigated, produce the largest returns to readiness.

As a separate phase of the test plan, late in the test period, at least one squadron from the test wing would deploy to an austere (i.e., non-bomber) base together with the planned "readiness spares package" appropriate to the size of the test detachment. At the austere base, they will simulate the planned use of the B-1B in a possible future conflict in which early sustained bomber support is crucial.

Recognizing that the considerations outlined above must be carefully evaluated in both the design of and the plan for implementing the test, the conferees provide the Secretary of the Air Force with broad latitude for preparation time, the initiation and duration of the actual test phase, and the test's ground rules. This includes the authority to postpone the test phase if the Secretary judges that the test cannot be conducted or continued without causing unacceptable risk to the readiness or safety of those elements of the B-1 force not included in the test.

Access by Comptroller General to information on heavy bomber programs (sec. 133)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 123) that would direct the Secretary of Defense to ensure full and prompt access by the General Accounting Office to Air Force information, reports, and data pertaining to heavy bombers.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

C-17 aircraft program progress payments and reports (sec. 134)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 134) that would direct the Secretary of Defense to withhold a portion of C-17 progress payments until the Secretary certifies: (1) that C-17 software testing and avionics integration have been completed; and (2) that costs waivers for software noncompliance have been identified and are in accordance with the terms of the existing C-17 contracts.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recesses.

Live-fire survivability testing of the C-17 aircraft (sec. 135)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 127) that would modify the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1993 (Public Law 102-484) to permit the Air Force to use any funds authorized and appropriated for the C-17 aircraft to conduct needed live-fire testing of the C-17 aircraft.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recesses.

Intertheater airlift program (sec. 136)

The budget request contained $2,394.8 million for C-17 aircraft procurement, including: $2,072.8 million for procuring six aircraft; $245.5 million for advance procurement of eight aircraft in fiscal year 1995; $16.5 million for modifications; and $60.0 million for spare parts.

The budget request also included $179.8 million for C-17 research and development and $290.8 million for the strategic sealift program.

The House bill would provide $1,918.7 million for intertheater airlift procurement, including $1,673.7 million for procurement and $245.0 million for advance procurement, and $179.8 million for airlift development. The House bill contained a provision (sec. 131) that would prohibit obligating any funds for the procurement of airlift aircraft for the Air Force for fiscal year 1994 until 45 days after the Secretary of Defense submitted a report on: (1) recommendations for the aircraft, or mix of aircraft, to be procured for the intertheater airlift mission; and (2) the results of a Defense Acquisition Board review of the intertheater airlift requirements and a cost and operational effectiveness analysis (COEA) of various intertheater airlift alternatives.

The Senate amendment included a provision (sec. 124) that would require the Department to conduct a fundamental reexamination of future U.S. airlift requirements, rather than a simple evaluation of the acquisition aspects of the C-17 program. The provision would preclude obligating fiscal year 1995 procurement funds until this analysis had been conducted. The provision would also link future C-17 production to meeting the specified milestones in a system maturity matrix. This system maturity matrix was developed by the Department to provide Congress with a set of bench marks to use in gauging when the program would be ready for production rates higher than the current four aircraft per year.

The Senate amendment also included a provision (sec. 303) that would amend section 2218 of title 10, United States Code. This provision would change the National Defense Strategic Sealift Fund into the National Defense Strategic Lift Fund. The Senate report (S. Rept. 103-112) expressed the belief that such a fund would enable the Department to shift funds more easily between airlift and sealift as competing, as well as complementary, ways of solving strategic lift deficiencies.

The Senate amendment would approve the C-17 research and development request, but would provide no funds for procuring the C-17 aircraft or spares. The Senate amendment would provide $2,669.1 million for a national defense strategic lift fund. Within that total, $290.8 million would be for strategic sealift. The remainder could be used for C-17, other intertheater airlift programs, commercial airlift alternatives to the C-17, or additional strategic sealift.

The House recesses on Senate section 124, with an amendment.

The conferees have heard informally from the Under Secretary of Defense for Acquisition and Technology (USD(AT)) on the results of the COEA required by the National Defense Authorization Act for fiscal year 1993. This analysis has apparently shown that mixes of aircraft, not just a purely C-17 aircraft force, could be an effective, as well as lower cost, alternative. These mixes, which would include fewer than the programmed 120 C-17 aircraft, include other available alternatives such as existing military transports and commercial-derivative aircraft.

The conferees agree to:

(1) Prohibit any obligation of fiscal year 1994 funds until the Secretary of Defense reports on the review of the acquisition program by the Under Secretary of Defense for Acquisition and Technology;

(2) Retain the requirement that the C-17 program achieve certain production and testing milestones;

(3) Authorize up to six C-17 aircraft;

(4) Initiate a non-developmental airlift alternative to the C-17;

(5) Provide $2,318.0 million for intertheater airlift procurement, consisting of:

(a) $1,918.0 million for buying four C-17 aircraft, including $1,730.0 million for procurement and $188.0 million for advance procurement of six C-17 in fiscal year 1995;

(b) $100.0 million only for procurement of non-developmental intertheater airlift alternatives; and

(c) $300.0 million in an "undersigned" category, which may be used for C-17, or for the non-developmental alternative.

(6) Require the Department to conduct a thorough review of airlift requirements before obligating any funds in fiscal year 1995.

Considering the significant trouble and delays in the C-17 program, the conferees agree that simply authorizing the procurement of six C-17s in fiscal year 1994 with no fences would not be prudent.

The conferees agree to reserve judgment on the total number of C-17 aircraft that the Department of Defense should buy. The Under Secretary of Defense for Acquisition and Technology intends to continue the C-17 program on a probationary basis. He intends to make a final decision about the program no later than November 1995. The conferees reserve the right to modify C-17 milestones and legislative fences based on the program's performance between now and that time.

The conferees direct the Department of Defense to begin immediately to implement one or more of the airlift alternatives identified. The conferees direct the Air Force to initiate the non-developmental airlift alternative with: (1) $100.0 million, if the undersigned $300.0 million is used to buy six C-17s; or (2) $400.0 million, if the Secretary chooses to buy only four C-17s or if the C-17 cannot meet the legislative requirements to produce more than four aircraft.

The conferees direct the Department of Defense to plan the fiscal year 1994 C-17 procurement effort to support either: (1) buying six C-17 aircraft, with $100.0 million for non-developmental alternatives; or (2) buying four C-17 aircraft, with $400.0 million available for the alternatives. The Department would be prohibited from shifting the $300.0 million to either C-17 or non-developmental aircraft until 30 days after the Secretary provides the required report of the USD(AT) reviews, and a plan for the intended use of the funds. The conferees recommend no such restrictions on spending the $100.0 million for the non-developmental alternatives.

The conferees are concerned that the Department may be ready to reduce unilaterally the operational requirements for the C-17 program. Section 134 of the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1993 required the Joint Requirements Oversight Council to review the adequacy of these C-17 requirements. The conferees anticipate receiving the results of that review.

Meanwhile, the conferees are concerned that the Department may be shifting the contract requirements to meet the aircraft the contractor is able to build, rather than building the aircraft needed to meet the requirements upon which the program was justified and originally contracted. The conferees expect the Secretary's forthcoming report on the C-17 acquisition program to describe thoroughly the: (1) reasons for any changes in the contracts requirements the Secretary intends to make; and (2) the terms of consideration that the government will require of the contractor for overrunning costs or underrunning these requirements.

The conferees are concerned about another area of performance. There have been rumors that the Department may be relaxing or elating reliability and maintainability (R&M) thresholds. The conferees understand that the projected ability of the C-17 aircraft to sustain wartime utilization rates above 15 hours per day is critical to the decision of whether the C-17 makes sense. The conferees strongly believe that the Department must not relax these R&M thresholds in any reformation of the current C-17 contracts.

The conferees understand that there may be sizable contractor claims arising from the C-17 development and procurement program. The conferees believe that the Secretary's forthcoming report must include a full accounting of any of the pending contract claims, proposed settlement terms, and mechanisms by which future performance can be gauged and guaranteed. The conferees believe that this information should be available before the Air Force commits to any more aircraft.

The Senate recesses on Senate section 303. The conferees reserve judgment on consolidating the strategic airlift and sealift programs at a later date. The conferees note that the Department argued against having the additional flexibility that a strategic lift fund would provide. The conferees were sympathetic to giving the Department more flexibility to manage these programs, but will be guided by this appeal in dealing with issues in other areas.

The conferees also direct the General Accounting Office (GAO) to continue to report on the cost, schedule, and performance of the C-17 program. It would also be helpful if Congress could have the GAO assessment of whether: (1) the overall goals for lift have been correctly set, (2) the original C-17 justification remains valid, and (3) the C-17 justification remains valid, and (3) the C-17 can still achieve original program requirements, given increases in program cost and technical problems.

Use of F-16 aircraft advance procurement funds for program termination costs (sec. 137)

The House bill included a provision (sec. 133) that would set aside $70.8 million for program termination costs for the F-16 program. The provision also would prohibit spending any fiscal year 1994 funds for F-16 advance procurement.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recesses.

Tactical signals intelligence aircraft (sec. 138)

The budget request contained $34.2 million for modernizing the Navy's EP-3 Aries II signals intelligence (SIGINT) aircraft, and $46.6 million for modernizing Air Force C-135 aircraft. Out of the total for C-135 modifications, $33.8 million was requested for the RC-135 "Rivet Joint" SIGINT aircraft. The request also included $7.8 million for EP-3 research and development within tactical cryptologic activities (TCP).

Last year, the conferees expressed concern about the SIGINT aircraft programs in the statement of managers (H. Rept. 102-966) accompanying the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1993. The conferees observed apparent duplication of efforts in the Navy and Air Force SIGINT programs. The conferees directed the Department of Defense to study this issue and choose between the RC-135 and EP-3 aircraft. The conferees directed the Department to consider all airborne and satellite SIGINT collection systems in determining the required numbers of RC-135 or EP-3 systems. Accordingly, the conferees restricted the obligation of any fiscal year 1993 funds provided for RC-135 re-engining and EP-3 upgrades pending the outcome of that analysis.

The Department submitted the required report shortly before the House bill and the Senate amendment passed. Neither body had sufficient time to review the analysis in sufficient detail before taking action on the pending authorization request.

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 212) that would deny $25.4 million of the EP-3 modernization effort and deny $5.0 million of the TCP activities funding for EP-3. The House bill also contained a provision (sec. 132) that would provide $93.2 million to procure two additional RC-135 aircraft and would remove the fiscal year 1993 restriction against re-engining RC-135 aircraft.

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 132) that would remove, with certain limitations, the prior year restrictions on EP-3 and RC-135 modernization. The Senate amendment would fully fund EP-3 modernization but deny the Department's $33.8 million in funding requested for the RC-135. The Senate amendment also would shift $100.9 million of unobligated fiscal year 1993 funds intended for C-135 series re-engining to other programs.

The conferees believe that the Department's tradeoff study lacks substance and credibility. The Department failed to choose between systems. The report asserted that the current number of EP-3 and RC-135 platforms are required for world-wide SIGINT coverage. Nevertheless, it proposed to modernize only the less capable and less expensive EP-3. The RC-135 would be frozen in its current configuration, referred to as baseline 6. In the opinion of the conferees, this funding gambit presumed that Congress would add RC-135 modernization funding.

The conferees are unhappy with the unresponsive nature of the Department's tactical SIGINT aircraft request and plan. Additionally, the conferees do not intend to be used in a game to fund programs which the Department may believe are congressional "sacred cows."

The conferees have learned of a further complication to this issue. The next generation SIGINT sensor suite, an airborne reconnaissance support program (ARSP) SIGINT upgrade program, is focused totally on U-2 aircraft integration. One of the central benefits of this new program is modular, or scalable architecture. The conferees fail to understand why this upgrade is targeted for the most stringent technical application, the smaller, power-limited U-2. Moreover, each of the services has been planning expensive, separate, and uncoordinated upgrade efforts for their individual SIGINT systems. The conferees are shocked that, in some cases, the services were unaware of even the existence of this ARSP SIGINT upgrade program. In the opinion of the conferees, following all of the separate paths would make the collective capability upgrades prohibitively expensive. Targeting the development of a common architecture on the U-2 platform unnecessarily delays the effort and perpetuates the proliferation of upgrade programs.

The conferees believe that a single, scalable, open architecture system which is adaptable to all tactical SIGINT platforms would dramatically improve capability, interoperability and competitive procurement opportunities. This approach could also significantly reduce modernization funding requirements. The conferees are also convinced that early demonstration of the ARSP SIGINT upgrade program architecture would lead to an operational capability years ahead of what might be possible by delaying until U-2 integration is practical.

Therefore, the conferees direct the Secretary of Defense to demonstrate expeditiously the ARSP upgrade program on a dedicated, non-developmental aircraft. The Secretary is also directed to consolidate this effort under the new Tactical Reconnaissance office (TRO) as described elsewhere in this statement of the managers. In addition, the conferees believe that the TRO should exercise configuration control over all future tactical airborne SIGINT upgrade activities in order to promote maximum commonality and to minimize duplication. To this end, the TRO should also control funding for future improvements in existing SIGINT platforms such as the U-2, RC-135, EP-3, ES-3, Senior Scout, RC-12, and the various unmanned aerial vehicles.

Accordingly, the House recedes on sections 132 and 212 of the House bill, and the Senate recedes on section 132 of the Senate amendment. The conferees agree to authorize the $34.2 million requested for EP-3 modernization, the $33.8 million requested for RC-135 modernization, and the $93.2 million the House bill would provide for additional RC-135 aircraft. This funding would be authorized in a single Defense Agencies procurement account controlled by the TRO.

The conferees recommend a provision that would: (1) remove the prior year restriction on EP-3 upgrades; (2) limit EP-3 upgrades to those associated with the conversion-in-lieu-of-procurement (CILOP) program; and (3) limit RC-135 upgrades to those necessary to bring aircraft into the baseline 6 configuration.

The conferees will not decide on upgrades to existing SIGINT platforms, beyond those identified above, until the Department of Defense provides a report to the congressional defense and intelligence committees. The report should include a recommendation on the feasibility of, and methods for, using ARSP SIGINT upgrade program technology in platforms other than the U-2. The conferees further authorize the TRO to use up to $93.2 million to acquire either an existing government-owned commercial derivative aircraft or a readily available commercial aircraft. The conferees are aware that aircraft such as the Army's homing overlay experiment aircraft (a B-767) or an EC-135 would be suitable for testing the ARSP upgrade program. The conferees agree to deny the $5.0 million requested within TCP funding for the EP-3.

Finally, the conferees recommend a provision discussed elsewhere in this statement of the managers under "C-135 Aircraft Program", that would reiterate the fiscal year 1993 restriction on RC-135 re-engining, and direct the Department to use unobligated fiscal year 1993 C-135 series aircraft re-engining funds for KC-135 re-engining.

C-135 aircraft program (sec. 139)

Out of the funds Congress appropriated in fiscal year 1993 for C-135 aircraft modifications, the Air Force intended to apply $100.9 million for RC-135 re-engining. Section 141 of the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1993 restricted the use of these funds.

The budget request contained $46.6 million for modification of Air Force C-135 series aircraft. Out of this total, $33.8 million was for various modifications for RC-135 "Rivet Joint" signals intelligence aircraft.

The House bill would approve $33.8 million for RC-135 modifications. The House bill also contained a provision (sec. 132) that would: (1) provide $93.2 million to procure two additional RC-135 aircraft; (2) remove the fiscal year 1993 restriction on re-engining RC-135 aircraft; and (3) add $160.0 million for eight KC-135 re-engining kits.

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 132) that would deny the $33.8 million requested for RC-135 modifications. The Senate amendment contained another provision (sec. 1013) that would authorize the Secretary of the Air Force to shift the $100.9 million that the Air Force intended to use for RC-135 modifications to other, higher priority programs.

The conferees agree to a provision that would authorize the Air Force to use the $100.9 million of unobligated fiscal year 1993 funds, along with $48.0 million of fiscal year 1994 funds, to purchase and install six KC-135E re-engining kits.

ALQ-135 jammer device (sec. 151)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 131) that would amend section 182(b)(2) of the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1991 (Public Law 101-510) to change the criteria for full rate production of jammer devices. Section 182(b)(2) requires performance more stringent than required in normal operational testing. The Senate provision would require jammers to meet the same operational testing standards that major acquisition programs must meet before they can proceed to full rate production.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

Global positioning system (sec. 152)

The Senate amendment included a provision (sec. 133) that would:

(1) prohibit, after the year 2000, any further obligation or expenditure of funds to modify or procure any aircraft, ship, armored vehicle, or indirect-fire weapon system that is not equipped with a GPS receiver;

(2) require the Secretary of Defense to provide up to $5.0 million from funds authorized and appropriated for the GPS satellite system and receiver programs to the National Academy of Sciences and the National Academy of Public Administration to study a variety of management and funding issues; and

(3) require the Secretary of Defense, in coordination with the Director of Central Intelligence, to report to Congress on potential threats to the United States and its allies from hostile exploitation of the GPS system, and possible countermeasures to such threats.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment.

The conferees agree to reduce the amount available for the study from up to $5.0 million to up to $3.0 million. In addition, the conferees direct the Secretary to sign a contract with the academies within 60 days after the enactment of this act.

The conferees are aware that the President's Science Advisor has started to review the GPS system as part of a larger examination of airline profitability. The conferees urge the Science Advisor to broaden this review because the future of the GPS system has major implications for administration policy on defense conversion, economic competitiveness, information highways, intelligent vehicle highway systems, and infrastructure investment.

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 136) that would prohibit the Navy from awarding a sole source contract for ring laser gyro navigation systems with funds from fiscal years 1992, 1993, and 1994.

The House bill contained no similar provision. The House report (H. Rept. 103-200) included similar direction.

The House recedes with an amendment that would delete the requirement to compete in fiscal year 1992. The conferees understand that the Navy is unable to buy any ring laser gyro navigation system with fiscal year 1992 funds, either sole source or competitively.

Operational support aircraft (sec. 154)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 137) that would prohibit the Department of defense from obligating procurement funds for operational support aircraft without full and open competition unless the Under Secretary of Defense for Acquisition certifies that procurement without full and open competition is to be made within an exception set forth in section 2304(c) of title 10, United States Code.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment that would prohibit the Secretary of Defense from obligating any funds for operational support aircraft until 60 days after the Secretary submits a study on these aircraft to the congressional defense committees. That study shall include a description of current aircraft inventory, peacetime and wartime missions, and funds in the future years defense program for operational support aircraft.

Administration of chemical demilitarization program (sec. 155)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 175) that would amend section 173(b)(1) of Public Law 102-484 to allow a period of 90 days for existing chemical demilitarization citizens' advisory commissions to submit appropriate comments to the congressional defense committees on the Department of the Army's report to Congress on alternative technologies.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment that would provide a 60 day period for citizens' advisory commissions in existence upon enactment of this act to submit appropriate comments to the congressional defense committees. The conferees note that the Army has requested a 60 day extension of the deadline for the submission of its report to Congress, from December 31, 1993 to March 1, 1994. The conferees understand that the Army's request is based on indications by the National Research Council that it will not be able to submit its recommendations to the Army by November 28, 1993. The conferees concur with the Army's request to extend the deadline for the submission of its report to Congress.

Chemical munitions disposal facilities, Tooele, Utah (sec. 156)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 171) that would prohibit the obligation of funds appropriated in fiscal year 1993 and 1994 for systemization of the chemical munitions disposal facilities at Tooele Army Depot, Utah. The funds could not be obligated until the Secretary of Defense certifies that: (1) recommendations in the Defense Base Closure and Realignment Commission for the realignment of Tooele Depot will not jeopardize the health, safety, and welfare of the surrounding community; and (2) adequate base support, management, oversight, and security personnel will remain to operate the chemical disposal facility after the realignment. The provision would direct the Secretary of Defense to identify by job title and category all the base support that would remain at the depot after its realignment.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment that would prohibit obligation of fiscal years 1993 and 1994 funds pending a certification from the Secretary of Defense that: (1) operation of the chemical disposal facilities at the depot will not jeopardize the health, safety, and environment of the surrounding community; and (2) adequate base support and personnel will remain at the depot to ensure public safety while munitions are stored, or disposal activities are in operation, at the depot.

Authority to convey Los Alamos dry dock (sec. 157)

The House bill included a provision (sec. 172) that would authorize the Secretary of the Navy to transfer all rights, title, and interest in the dry dock designated as Los Alamos (AFDB 7) to the Brownsville Navigation District of Brownsville, Texas.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

Sales authority of certain working-capital funded industrial activities of the Army (sec. 158)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 173) that would allow the Army's Watervliet Arsenal to enter into commercial contracts for the sale of manufactured articles or services outside the Department of Defense.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

Space-based missile warning and tracking (sec. 159)

The budget request included $66.8 million for RDT&E for the defense support program (DSP), $214.8 for the follow-on early warning system (FEWS), $252.6 for the Brilliant Eyes (BE), and $10.0 million for the Cobra Ball missile warning and surveillance systems.

The House bill would combine the requests for DSP, FEWS, and BE into a single line within the Defense Agencies account and reduce the aggregate by $200.0 million.

The Senate amendment would combine the requests for all the RDT&E programs with the requests for DSP procurement, which totaled $497.7 million, in a single line within the Air Force missile procurement account.

The House and Senate reports (H. Rept. 103-200 and S. Rept. 103-112) advised the Department of Defense that its plans for the various missile warning and surveillance programs were not affordable. The reports noted that the new Administration had undertaken a major review of these programs and expected the Administration to inform the Congress prior to conference on the results of its review and its recommendations. Unfortunately, the Administration has not met these expectations.

Accordingly, the conferees have decided to preserve options for the Secretary of Defense and Congress as much as possible while enforcing budget discipline. The conferees believe that $240.0 million can be reduced from the combined procurement and RDT&E request for these programs without compromising acceptable Administration decisions.

The conferees, therefore, agree to authorize $801.9 million in Defense Agencies procurement. The conferees agree to a provision that would allow the Secretary of Defense to allocate these funds to specific programs for warning and attack assessment. Under this provision, any transfers from this account shall be in addition to the transfer limits established elsewhere in this act. In addition, the provision would permit the Secretary to transfer up to $250.0 million without submitting a prior-approval reprogramming request in order to maintain program continuity prior to final decisions by the Secretary and Congress. The conferees believe that this transfer authority and amount will sustain ongoing efforts for up to five months into fiscal year 1994. Any additional transfers shall be in accordance with established transfer procedures. The Secretary shall inform the congressional defense committees of the detailed results of his deliberations and his recommended allocations. The conferees intend that the congressional defense committees have the opportunity to review the Secretary's decisions and recommendations carefully before irrevocable decisions are made and implemented. It is also the intent of the conferees that none of the ongoing programs be terminated until 30 days after the Secretary of Defense formally notifies Congress of any termination decision and provides the rationale for the decision.

The conferees note that the Department has invested over $2.0 billion to date in the FEWS program out of concern over capability shortfalls of DSP. This investment has produced much useful technology that should form the basis for any DSP follow-on effort, be it FEWS or another system.

LEGISLATIVE PROVISIONS NOT ADOPTED

TOW missile program

The House bill included a provision (sec. 112) that would mandate the termination of the TOW missile program.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

DDG-51 destroyer and fast sealift programs

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 121) that would prohibit the Navy from obligating funds for the DDG-51 guided missile destroyer program until the Navy awarded contracts to convert ships for the strategic sealift program.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes. The Navy has recently awarded both conversion and new construction contracts for the strategic sealift program. The conferees are encouraged by the Navy's progress and urge the Navy to continue to emphasize this important program.

Conveyance of observation aircraft

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 174) that would authorize the Secretary of Defense to convey without cost not more than four light observation aircraft to a non-profit organization in Florida under certain conditions.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

Modified M113 carriers and AGT-1500 turbine engines

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 111) that would authorize additional funds to modify M113 carriers and to procure additional AGT-1500 turbine engines, subject to the limitation that none of the funds could be obligated in fiscal year 1994.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes

The conferees agree to authorize an additional $12.0 million to initiate the remanufacturing of M113 carriers and an additional $17.0 million for AGT-1500 turbine engines.

The conferees note the need to remanufacture M113s in various configurations. The conferees, however, reserve judgment on the overall scope and affordability of this effort.

The conferees are concerned about preserving the tank industrial base, particularly the engine segment of that industrial base. The conferees direct the Secretary of Defense to establish expeditiously a blue ribbon panel, as described in the Senate report (S. Rept. 103-112). The conferees believe that it is urgent for the panel to develop a master plan for preserving the public and private industrial base for tanks and tank engines. This plan should be submitted to the congressional defense committees by April 30, 1994.

The conferees agree that the additional $17.0 million should be applied to items which will not be wasted, regardless of the findings of the blue ribbon panel or the results of the ongoing reliability testing of overhauled engines. The conferees direct that the funds be used for long-lead items for new or remanufactured engines, or for spare parts for existing engines. The conferees also direct that none of the funds be used to commit the government to new or depot-overhauled engines for the first phase of the M1A2 tank upgrade program until the Army provides a report on the results of the reliability testing of overhauled engines. That report should include the Army's plan for proceeding with either a new or depot-overhauled engine for this phase of the upgrade.

Solid rocket motor upgrade program

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 126) that would permit the Secretary of Defense to implement a "supplemental agreement" described in section 9164 of the Department of Defense Appropriations Act for Fiscal Year 1993 (Public Law 102-396) only in accordance with certain authorities stated in the Senate provision.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

The conferees agree with the substance and purpose of the Senate provision. The conferees, however, have not adopted the provision because the Senate provision is moot. The Secretary of Defense has chosen to implement the supplemental agreement as directed in the Department of Defense Appropriations Act for Fiscal Year 1993.

The conferees believe that it is inappropriate for Congress to intervene in, and direct a detailed settlement of, contract disputes between the executive branch and its contractors and subcontractors, particularly when the dispute is being litigated. The conferees would have preferred that the Secretary be granted the authority to settle the dispute if he judged that to be in the government's interest. The Senate provision would have granted that authority and discretion.

As part of the settlement the Department of Defense entered into on the solid rocket motor upgrade program, the subcontractor's production contract was converted to a fixed-price-incentive type of contract. This action increased the prime contractor's risk, which was mitigated by increasing the prime contract price ceiling. This adjustment, however, was made to the entire contract. Therefore, any cost overrun on any other part of the prime contract could be paid for from this ceiling adjustment. The conferees believe strongly that this ceiling adjustment should have been restricted to the solid rocket motor subcontract alone.

Sense of Congress on expediting sealift procurement

The Senate amendment included a provision (sec. 134) that would express the sense of Congress that the Secretary of the Navy should award sealift conversion and construction contracts expeditiously.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes. The Navy has recently awarded four strategic sealift ship contracts. Two contracts are for converting five existing ships to the required configuration. Two other contracts are to build as many as 12 new construction sealift ships.

TITLE II—RESEARCH, DEVELOPMENT, TEST AND EVALUATION (RDT&E)

Overview

The budget request for fiscal year 1994 contained an authorization of $38,620.3 million for research, development, test and evaluation in the Department of Defense. The House bill would authorize $37,885.4 million. The Senate amendment would authorize $35,900.2 million. The conferees recommend authorization of $34,706.4 million. Unless noted explicitly in the statement of managers, all changes are made without prejudice.

RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT, ARMY

Overview

The budget request for fiscal year 1994 contained an authorization of $5,249.9 million for Army research, development, test and evaluation. The House bill would authorize $5,427.1 million. The Senate amendment would authorize $5,303.7 million. The conferees recommend authorization of $5,197.5 million, as delineated in the following table. Unless noted explicitly in the statement of managers, all changes are made without prejudice.

Electromechanics and hypervelocity physics

The conferees support the change of the Army's Institute for Advanced Technology (IAT) from a federally funded research and development center (FFRDC) to a university research laboratory. Accordingly, the conferees approve an increase in funding for electromechanics and hypervelocity physics, PE 601104A, from $3.712 million to $6.0 million.

Materials technology

The budget request included $11.288 million for materials technology.

The House bill would authorize $19.788 million, an increase of $8.5 million for ductile iron technology.

The Senate amendment would authorize $15.288 million, an increase of $4.0 million for Army advanced composite materials research.

The conferees agree to authorize $17.288 million for materials technology. Out of this amount, $4.0 million would be for composite materials and $2.0 million for ductile iron technologies.

Although Congress is interested in ductile iron technology, financial constraints prevent adding more than $2.0 million for ductile iron research at this time. The conferees urge the Army to consider ductile iron technology as a priority development for the technology base. The Army should consider directing a portion of these funds to the Tank and Automotive Command to facilitate final field testing of the cast ductile iron track components.

Microwave camera

The budget request included $28.8 million for electronic survivability and fuzing technology in PE 62120A.

The House bill would authorize an additional $6.0 million for the continuation of microwave camera development.

The Senate amendment contained no similar funding.

The conferees agree to authorize the requested amount and urge the Department of Defense to give priority to completing the microwave camera technology base development within existing funding for RDT&E program elements.

Chemical and biological defense programs

The House bill recommended the transfer of $1.8 million from the Air Force and $8.7 million from the Navy to the Army for chemical and biological exploratory and advanced development. The House bill also recommended an additional $10.0 million in program element 602622A to promote greater international cooperation in research and development for chemical and biological defense.

The Senate amendment would authorize the requested amount.

The House recedes and notes that title XVII of this act directs that funding for the military services' chemical and biological defense programs be integrated in a separate defense account after fiscal year 1994. The conferees transfer funds back to the Air Force and Navy accounts for fiscal year 1994.

High explosive materials

The budget request contained $34.8 million for weapons and munitions technology (PE 62624A).

The House bill would authorize an additional $4.0 million for industrial base activity associated with high explosive materials.

The Senate amendment contained no similar funding.

The conferees note that the Army, in its revised modernization plan, made significant reductions in ammunition production to help achieve overall five year funding reduction targets. This will further degrade the dwindling ammunition industrial base. The conferees agree to authorize an additional $2.0 million in PE 62624A, for a total of $36.8 million, to begin investigative activity for a small scale pilot production facility at the Longhorn Army ammunition plant.

Battery technology

The budget request contained $19.4 million for electronics and electronics devices.

The House bill would add $3.0 million to continue battery research for the purposes detailed in the House report (H. Rept. 103-200).

The Senate amendment contained no similar funding.

The House recedes. The conferees agree that portable power is vitally important to the soldier in the field and direct the Army to ensure a strong program in battery research, with emphasis on low cost, recycling, and pollution-tolerant battery systems.

Environmental quality technology

The budget request contained $21.2 million for environmental quality technology in PE 602720A.

The House bill would provide an additional $43.0 million for a number of programs, including $10.0 million for expansion of testing at the Jefferson Proving Ground, Indiana.

The Senate amendment added $15.4 million to the same program element which included funding for the Jefferson Proving Ground (JPG) environmental program.

The conferees agree that there is substantial merit in continuing the effort at JPG. The conferees approve $10.0 million to continue the Jefferson Proving Ground program to improve and accelerate the state of the art of unexploded ordnance detection and remediation technologies in order to facilitate the rehabilitation of millions of acres of land on military reservations. The conferees also approve an additional $12.0 million, for a total authorization of $43.2 million, to continue or begin new work on other programs detailed in the House and Senate reports.

Telemedicine

The House bill would provide an additional $1.25 million for a telemedicine test bed demonstration by the Army Medical Research Development Command, the Advanced Research Projects Agency, and the Naval Research Laboratory.

The Senate amendment would provide an additional $10.0 million to the Office of the Secretary of Defense to accelerate the application of computers and communications technologies to the reduction of health care costs.

The conferees agree to provide an additional $10.5 million in PE 603002A for increased telemedicine research and development activity to include imaging, diagnostics, and electronic connectivity of other military and federal facilities to demonstrate emerging telemedicine capabilities.

Project Plowshares

The Senate amendment would authorize $5.0 million to demonstrate a prototype training system for disaster preparedness training. The goal of this project—named Project Plowshares—is to develop a computer-based training system for civilian disaster preparedness by using advance modeling and distributed simulation technology.

The House bill contained no similar funding.

The Senate recedes. The conferees commend the Army and the Army's Simulation, Training, and Instrumentation Command for launching this innovative project. Project Plowshares represents an excellent application of military technology to the civil sector. The project will permit civilian authorities to test their disaster preparedness plans more realistically. The project may also provide a command and control system for use in responding to natural disasters and other emergencies.

The conferees endorse the Army's efforts and strongly recommend that the Department of Defense consider reprogramming funds to support the Project Plowshares program in fiscal year 1994. The conferees recommend most strongly that funding for the program be included in the fiscal year 1995 budget request.

Army tactical exploitation of national capabilities

The budget request included $67.9 million for the development of tactical exploitation of national capabilities (TENCAP).

The House bill would reduce the request by $20.0 million to begin phase-out of the electronic processing and dissemination system (EPDS).

The Senate amendment approved the requested amount.

The conferees agree to authorize the amount requested for RDT&E, but reduce the amount requested for operation and maintenance by $5.0 million for budgetary reasons.

Multiple launch rocket system enhancements

The budget request included $40.9 million for various product improvements for the multiple launch rocket system (MLRS). Out of this total, $17.3 million would be used to develop extended range MLRS rockets. The Army intends to begin producing these improved rockets in fiscal year 2000.

The House bill and the Senate amendment would approve the requested amount.

The conferees understand that the Army could accelerate this schedule to begin production in fiscal year 1997 or earlier. The conferees believe that accelerated development and production of extended range rockets would have several benefits. The benefits could include fielding better capabilities and protecting the industrial base. As described elsewhere in this statement of managers, the conferees believe that adapting the brilliant anti-tank (BAT) submunition for extended range MLRS rockets is an attractive option. Therefore, the conferees strongly urge the Army to accelerate extended range MLRS rocket development. The conferees expect the Army to adjust the future years defense program to reflect this acceleration.

Palletized loading system (PLS) flat rack

The National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1993 provided funds to the Army to develop, fabricate, and test prototype 3,000-3,500 gallon fuel and water tanks for the palletized loading system (PLS). The conferees understand that the Army plans to expand and complete this effort through the development, fabrication, and testing of a series of PLS flat racks necessary for engineering equipment and a heavy repair vehicle which makes use of the PLS chassis. The conferees support this undertaking and urge the Army to request the reprogramming of funds sufficient to complete this effort.

All source analysis system

The budget request included $59.7 million for the Army's all source analysis system (ASAS), which is designed to provide timely, accurate situational intelligence and target support to service, component, and joint commanders.

The House bill would deny $39.0 million in procurement and operation and maintenance funding for the ASAS Block I, and increase research and development for ASAS Block II by $9.0 million.

The Senate amendment approved the requested amount.

The conferees agree to a $12.5 million reduction in procurement and a $10.0 million reduction in operation and maintenance of ASAS Block I. The conferees also authorize an additional $9.0 million in research and development to accelerate ASAS Block II.

The conferees are pleased that the Army has taken the proper steps to reorient the ASAS program and are encouraged by the Army's plan to accelerate Block II development by rapidly prototyping the WARRIOR baseline system. The conferees believe that, if the Department of Defense and the Army continue to adhere to standard, major weapon system acquisition policies for ASAS, the rapid advances in information processing technology will continue to result in the fielding of outdated equipment. The conferees, therefore, encourage the Army to adopt an evolutionary development strategy to quickly equip the force with the WARRIOR baseline capability and to ensure the system conforms to the workstation standards established by the joint deployable intelligence support system (JDISS) program office. In light of the ASAS program's lower than anticipated costs, as reflected by Army and OSD independent cost estimates, and the need to speed the normal acquisition process, the conferees direct OSD to delegate acquisition authority to the Army by downgrading ASAS to an acquisition category II system.

Sense and destroy armor munition

The Army intends to use the sense and destroy armor munition (SADARM) in both 155mm artillery projectiles and multiple launch rocket system (MLRS) rockets. The budget request contained $41.0 million or research and development and $77.7 million for initial SADARM production. The budget request would have begun low rate initial production in the first quarter of fiscal year 1994.

The House bill would approve the research and development request, but would approve only $42.5 million for procurement. The House report (H. Rept. 103-200) recommended that the Army reprogram procurement funds to cover any additional research and development needs.

The Senate amendment would provide $98.7 million in research and development to continue SADARM engineering and manufacturing systems development, but would deny SADARM procurement this year.

Serious technical problems have now surfaced in the SADARM testing program. Since 1986, the Army has spent over $800.0 million developing SADARM. The Army has now indicated that it will have to extend SADARM development by 27 months and spend more than $98.0 million in fiscal year 1994 to address the technical problems.

The Army cannot assure the conferees that it can resolve these problems. The conferees are disappointed that SADARM has serious technical problems, resulting in poor testing performance. Nevertheless, the conferees are concerned that, without SADARM, the Army will have no modern artillery projectile or submunition with terminal guidance.

The conferees agree to provide $28.5 million. The conferees are unwilling to support a restructured SADARM program until the Army provides more analysis on this issue. The conferees direct the Secretary of the Army to:

(1) maintain the SADARM program in a standby status;

(2) conduct a detailed analysis to determine whether technical problems with SADARM can be resolved;

(3) reexamine the requirements for SADARM and other terminally guided munitions;

(4) evaluate other programs and technologies to determine whether there are alternatives that could yield terminally guided submunitions for 155mm artillery projectiles and MLRS rockets;

(5) examine alternatives to using artillery projectiles or ballistic rockets (e.g., fiber-optic guided weapons and air-delivered ordnance) for attacking the targets for which SADARM was designed; and

(6) report to the congressional defense committees on the results of these analyses by May 2, 1994.

The Secretary's report should recommend a course of action for fielding terminally guided submunitions, either SADARM or some alternative. The recommendations in this report should reflect funding available in the future years defense program.

Avenger complementary missile

The budget request did not contain funds to continue the ongoing review of complementary missiles for various Army and Marine Corps air defense platforms.

The House bill recommended $9.0 million in the Army's missile procurement account for this purpose.

The Senate amendment contained no similar recommendation.

The conferees note that Congress provided the Army with $7.9 million in fiscal year 1993 to review potential complementary missiles to the Stinger on Avenger, Bradley and light armored vehicle-air defense (LAV-AD) vehicles. The evaluation is currently underway, but the Army has reported that the funds available are insufficient to include live-fire tests of candidate missiles against representative threat targets. The conferees understand that the Army has narrowed the field of candidate missiles and believe that live-fire tests of available candidates is an essential part of the evaluation process.

Therefore, the conferees agree to provide $9.0 million in Army research and development to be used for the purpose of preparing for the conducting live-fire tests of complementary missile candidates. The conferees direct the Secretary of the Army to report the results of these tests to the congressional defense committees not later than June 15, 1994.

Environmental remediation demonstration project

The budget request contained $44.0 million for environmental compliance (PE 65856A).

The House bill would authorize an additional $4.0 million in PE 65856A for the Army to participate with a university in a cooperative environmental remediation demonstration project at the Fort Ord, California landfill.

The Senate amendment contained no similar funding.

The Senate recesses.

Remediation technology for the detection, location, classification, and inventory of unexploded ordnance

The conferees continue to support Department of the Army efforts to examine detection and remediation technologies for unexploded ordnance (UXO). Congress established a program last year at Jefferson Proving Ground (JPG), Indiana within the Army's environmental quality technology program, to research the detection and removal of unexploded ordnance (UXO) in ordnance-contaminated areas. However, only a portion of the funds authorized and appropriated for fiscal year 1993 were used in limited demonstrations of some systems. The conferees are concerned about the lack of progress in the remediation of sites contaminated with buried UXO, the techniques for collecting and archiving data, and the lack of adequate site investigation standards.

The conferees direct the Army to expedite its plan to establish controlled test sites at JPG for the testing of detection and remediation systems and technologies, and to conduct a competition during 1994. The conferees direct the Army to invite all technologies and systems to demonstrate their capabilities at the controlled sites. Upon conclusion of the competition, the best performing system or systems should demonstrate the equipment's capabilities at a field test site at JPG and at four geologically different demonstration sites.

The four demonstration sites should be selected in coordination with the congressional defense committees during 1994, based on the Army's requirements. These four sites should be drawn from active installations, formerly utilized defense sites (FUDS), base realignment and closure (BRAC) sites, and installation remediation program (IRP) sites. Individual demonstration sites for commercial systems should be of sufficient size to demonstrate technical maturity and robustness, preferably 300-500 acres. Sites for testing developmental systems should be appropriate for the system tested.

Upon completion of the JPG competition, the Army should establish guidelines for: detection of UXO; preliminary minimum performance standards for the collection of data and processing of records based on the capabilities and limitations of the best detection systems; and the standards for Department of Defense land use established by the Explosive Safety Board. These guidelines should formalize, to the maximum extent possible, those procedures necessary to investigate contaminated sites and to enable companies to bid on work. Matters such as information to offerors or quoters, evaluation factors for awards, and estimation criteria for costs (e.g., estimating the cost by job, rather than by manhours) should then be promptly modified to permit the use of new systems. The objective of this effort is to identify the systems which offer the best capability to expedite detection of UXO on active installations, IRP, FUDS, or BRAC sites.

Following completion of the testing described above, the controlled test sites at JPG should continue to be used to test and demonstrate new detection systems as they are developed. Because numerous contaminated sites are available at JPG, field sites should also be made available to companies and other entities to demonstrate both new detection and remediation methods and systems.

Exploratory research

It has come to the conferees' attention that the Department of Defense started to transfer a large proportion of its exploratory research from within the Department to universities and industry. The conferees are concerned that, while the intent of this initiative may have merit, the DOD directive, as implemented by the military services, may have severe and unintended consequences on military-unique research and development activities. Specifically, as a result of Office of the Secretary of Defense budget decision 755, the Army is seeking a 12

Tri-service standoff attack missile

The budget request contained $89.7 million for the Army, $75.4 million for the Navy, and a classified amount for the Air Force to continue development of the tri-service standoff attack missile (TSSAM). The budget request also contained $195.9 million in advance procurement for the Air Force version of the missile.

The House bill would authorize the procurement funds at the requested level. However, the House bill would terminate Army and Navy participation in the TSSAM program. The Army variant of the TSSAM was intended to carry the brilliant antitank (BAT) submunition. The House bill would continue the Army tactical missile system (ATACMS) program and add $20.0 million to integrate the BAT on ATACMS. The House bill also would increase funding for the Air Force to compensate it for the higher costs it would incur with the termination of Army and Navy participation in the program.

The Senate amendment would authorize the requested amounts.

The conferees agree to direct the Army to terminate its participation in the TSSAM program. The conferees also agree to direct the Navy to continue its participation in the TSSAM program. The conferees note that the BAT program began when the operational scenario envisioned massive, Soviet-style tank armies far behind enemy lines moving relentlessly forward. Today, analysts predict the only comparable scenario might be in the very early hours of a tank assault, much as was the case when Iraq invaded Kuwait. In such a scenario, however, the BAT would have little relevance, since it would be launched only by ground-based launchers which could not arrive in the theater for weeks. The Air Force and Navy do not intend to install the BAT on air-launched versions of TSSAM.

It is unlikely that the Army would be in a theater of operations without the Navy and Air Force. Even after the Army arrives in the theater, BAT on ATACMS may not be the answer. The conferees reserve judgment on how our deployed forces should best engage moving tanks 200 miles behind the front lines. For example, it could well be that the Air Force and Navy should deploy BAT on TSSAM. Their forces may have more of a requirement for BAT to blunt massive armored assaults before other forces have deployed to the theater.

The conferees understand, however, that the BAT could be installed on multiple launch rocket system (MLRS) rockets. Deploying BAT in this fashion would limit the attack distance to less than 50 kilometers. The conferees note that this distance is fully within the engagement range of the average division and the organic intelligence capabilities for ground forces. It also would permit Army forces to attack small numbers of enemy tanks without using the large payload designed for ATACMS.

The conferees believe the Army should carefully assess the BAT/ATACMS/MLRS issue. The conferees reserve judgement on the ultimate future of BAT until they have evaluated a comprehensive Department of Defense analysis of anti-armor munitions on indirect-fire weapon systems.

Molecular design center

The budget request included $416.9 million for defense research sciences in PE 61153N.

The House bill would authorize an additional $10.0 million for PE 61153N to initiate a molecular design institute for the purposes detailed in the House report (H. Rept. 103-200).

The Senate amendment contained no similar funding.

The conferees recommend a $750,000 increase in PE 61153N for a total authorization of $417.7 million. The conferees urge the Navy to use $10.0 million of these funds for the initiation of a molecular design institute if available funding in this program element allows. Any such institute shall be initiated on a competitive basis.

Free electron laser

The Senate amendment would authorize $25.0 million in the Navy technology base (PE 62111N) for a defense-oriented free electron laser program.

The House bill contained no similar funding.

The conferees authorize $10.0 million in the Navy program element to sustain research on the application of free electron lasers to military missions, such as ship defense. Separately, the conferees have authorized the requested amount of $19.2 million for the medical free electron laser program.

The conferees note that the Department of Defense appears to have no coherent plans to support a technology base for the military application of high-power lasers. The congressional defense committees are besieged with requests for additional funding for various high-power laser programs for a variety of missions. The conferees direct the Secretary of Defense to develop high-power laser program guidance as part of the defense capability plan mandated under section 2506 of title 10, United States Code, and due to be transmitted to Congress by March 31, 1994.

Replacement of halon gas for fire suppression

The budget request contained $34.4 million for mission support technology (PE 602233N).

The House bill recommended an additional authorization of $22.6 million, including $2.4 million to research, develop, and demonstrate environmentally safe gaseous, non-CFC alternatives to halon gas for fire suppression in military systems and in related industrial and commercial fire suppression applications.

The Senate amendment contained no similar funding.

The conferees agree to authorize an additional $2.4 million for PE 602233N.

Advanced anti-radiation guided missile

The budget request included no funds for continued development of an advanced anti-radiation guided missile (AARGM) with a dual mode seeker.

The House bill included a provision (sec. 218) that would require obligation of $10.1 million in fiscal year 1993 funds for continued AARGM development using technology derived from work done with funding provided through the small business innovative research (SBIR) program. The House bill would provide $12.5 million for this purpose in fiscal year 1994.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

The conferees understand that the Marine Corps has an operational requirement for an AARGM-type system. The conferees agree to provide $9.0 million to support the third phase of AARGM development that will lead to a captive flight demonstration. The conferees intend that the Marine Corps pursue a demonstration program with limited scope. The conferees direct that the Navy's internal RDT&E activities for fiscal year 1994 related to the AARGM program shall be limited to government involvement in development design reviews, test and evaluation, and system performance analysis.

The Marine Corps, which has not funded AARGM development, should seek the other military services participation while this effort proceeds. Congress believes that the Navy and the Air Force may want to participate in developing technology for a dual mode seeker that can support the defense suppression mission. Congress, however, does not intend to provide additional funding for this program without a stronger sign of commitment from the Department of Defense.

Interactive multi-dimensional acoustic trainer (IMAT)

The budget request for manpower, personnel, and training contained $18.6 million (PE 63707N).

The House bill recommended an additional $3.8 million in PE 603707N for the exploitation of interactive, computer-assisted training in the interactive multi-dimensional acoustic trainer (IMAT) program.

The Senate amendment contained no similar funding.

The House recedes. The conferees believe that the technology demonstrated in the IMAT program shows great promise for training in the areas of active and passive anti-submarine warfare, mine countermeasures, radar, electronic support measures, crypto-analysis, satellite communications, and other applications. The conferees encourage the Navy to reprogram funds to provide additional support for this innovative training technology in fiscal year 1994. The conferees also encourage the Navy to establish a five-year program that will lead to its adoption for training throughout the service.

Low-low frequency active program

The budget request included $49.2 million for advanced antisubmarine technology.

The House bill would authorize an additional $15.0 million to maintain the schedule for critical at-sea tests of a full low-low frequency active (LLFA) array.

The Senate amendment made no similar recommendation.

The House recedes.

As a part of the next annual update of the antisubmarine warfare master plan, the conferees direct the Secretary of the Navy to assess the potential contribution of LLFA technology to antisubmarine warfare operations in littoral waters. The Secretary also should identify a program for LLFA technology development and evaluation as a part of the Navy's overall antisubmarine warfare program.

Expendable acoustic source technology

The budget request included $49.2 million in program element 0603747N for advanced submarine warfare technology.

The House bill would authorize an additional $4.0 million to exploit the development of extended echo ranging technology for shallow water antisubmarine operations.

The Senate amendment contained no similar funding.

The Senate recedes.

Non-acoustic antisubmarine warfare

The Department of Defense is pursuing a number of projects that are attempting to yield a better understanding of submarine detection. Most research has historically focused on acoustics. The Department has been exploring various other means of submarine detection. These efforts are consolidated under non-acoustic antisubmarine warfare (NAASW) programs. The budget request included $14.0 million in program element 603528N and $25.9 million in program element 603714D for supporting the Navy and Department of Defense NAASW programs, respectively.

The House report (H. Rept. 103-200) directed the Department not to obligate fiscal year 1994 funds in either program until the Under Secretary of Defense for Acquisition had: (1) reviewed both programs; and (2) certified to the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and the House of Representatives that necessary coordination between the two programs was taking place.

The Senate amendment would approve the budget request.

The conferees understand that the Under Secretary of Defense for Acquisition and Technology has undertaken the review requested by the House report and has taken steps to improve coordination between the two programs. Therefore, the conferees agree that the two programs should proceed without an obligation restriction.

The conferees also have been made aware of another NAASW issue. One of the Navy's NAASW projects is an advanced technology demonstration (ATD) called "ATD-111." The ATD-111 is scheduled for completion in fiscal year 1995.

The conferees note that the Senate Appropriations Committee expressed concern about whether ATD-111 duplicates other, more advanced or more promising technologies in its committee report (S. Rept. 103-153) on the Department of Defense Appropriations bill for Fiscal Year 1994.

The Senate and House conferees did not reach the same conclusion during their respective reviews of the fiscal year 1994 budget request. After learning about this concern, the conferees sought clarification from the Department of the Navy. The Department's response indicates that Congress may have been provided with some erroneous information.

The Navy's position is that there is no related technology, supported by development or procurement funds, which is either more advanced or more promising than the ATD-111 project. Preliminary results from the project's first target trials are impressive. The results also tend to confirm that the project can yield a system that can be shared among operational Navy aircraft, rather than requiring equipment that must be permanently installed.

The conferees are convinced that project ATD-111 has considerable potential and should be continued. Consequently, the conferees agree that the Navy should take immediate action to clarify the conflicting ATD-111 information. If there are other, more advanced or more promising technologies, the conferees need to know about them.

Therefore, the conferees direct the Secretary of the Navy to: (1) search thoroughly for any similar competitive research and development projects; (2) evaluate the relative maturity, capability, and life cycle costs of ATD-111 and any other programs identified in this search; (3) outline an appropriate acquisition strategy that could carry them forward from the development phase; (4) identify additional possible missions these technologies may satisfy; and (5) report the results of these efforts to the congressional defense committees with the submission of the fiscal year 1994 budget request.

Ship main propulsion gas turbine improvements

The budget request included $92.3 million for advanced surface machinery systems.

The House bill recommended an additional $5.0 million to permit the Navy to evaluate the potential for long-term improvements to the LM-2500 gas turbine engine.

The Senate amendment contained no similar funding.

The House recedes.

The conferees support the development of the intercooled recuperated (ICR) gas turbine engine to meet future requirements for an advanced, fuel efficient, high-powered gas turbine for naval surface combatants. The conferees also believe that the Navy should evaluate the option of backfitting an improved LM-2500. The conferees understand that this might trim operating costs for existing naval ships, and, in concert with the ICR engine, cut operating costs in new construction ships.

The conferees direct the Navy to provide the congressional defense committees with a complete life cycle cost analysis of proceeding with an LM-2500R development. Should such improvements prove attractive, the conferees recommend that the Navy consider setting up such a program to work in parallel with the development of the ICR gas turbine.

Army/Marine Corps 155mm lightweight howitzer program

The statement of managers (H. Rept. 102-966) accompanying the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1993 (Public Law 102-484) recommended $13.1 million for the Marine Corps lightweight 155mm howitzer program. The conferees directed that none of those funds be obligated, however, until the Army and Marine Corps established a joint development program and published a joint operational requirement document for the system.

The conferees have learned that the Army and Marine Corps recently signed a memorandum of agreement (MOA) on a 155mm howitzer replacement program. This MOA establishes requirements for the replacement howitzer, identifies a study program, and describes a series of technical evaluations of existing 155mm howitzer prototypes. Having taken these actions, the Army and Marine Corps will be able to establish a joint operational requirements document and a joint development program.

The conferees are also aware that the Army Research Laboratory and XVIII Airborne Corps conducted recent field experiments on towed artillery. These experiments, which applied advanced fire control technologies, show promise for making significant improvements in tactical mobility and the operational effectiveness of towed artillery systems. The conferees believe that the Army and Marine Corps should evaluate such technologies in developing the joint operational requirement for a lightweight 155mm howitzer.

The conferees agree that signing the MOA achieves the result intended by the conferees in restricting fiscal year 1993 funds. The conferees recommend that the Army and Marine Corps implement the program identified in the MOA expeditiously. The conferees also recommend that DOD officials consider including the lightweight 155mm howitzer program as one of the advanced concept and technology demonstrations now being defined in the Office of the Secretary of Defense.

Short-range anti-armor weapon/bunker defeat munition

The budget request included $21.1 million in Navy research and development for the short-range anti-armor weapons (SRAW) development program for the Marine Corps. The budget request also included $6.3 million in Army program element 604802A to begin engineering and manufacturing development for the bunker defeat munition (BDM).

The House report (H. Rept. 103-200) would prohibit the obligation of funds for SRAW and BDM until the Army and Marine Corps establish a joint program to exploit the SRAW design. The House report further directed the Secretary of the Army and the Secretary of the Navy to provide the congressional defense committees a joint report on program plans, schedule, funding requirements, and management structure for a joint program with the fiscal year 1995 budget request.

The Senate report (S. Rept. 103-112) would direct the Secretary of Defense to ensure that the Marine Corps conduct a three-year engineering and manufacturing development (EMD) program for the SRAW antitank weapon. The report also would direct the Marine Corps and Army to pursue a joint program to develop a multipurpose variant of the SRAW warhead.

The conferees agree that the Army should pursue a limited, interim program for a bunker-defeat system. However, the conferees agree that the SRAW and BDM characteristics are too similar to justify maintaining separate programs for the long-term. The conferees believe that the Department of Defense could ultimately field a long-term solution to the problem, perhaps based on the SRAW missile. This system should be capable of defeating bunkers, brick and concrete walls, and light armor targets.

The conferees believe that such a system should take advantage of technology developed in the Army's multipurpose individual munition (MPIM) program. The Marine Corps should integrate the Army multipurpose warhead with its own SRAW missile flight module. The conferees believe that the services should conduct an abbreviated, joint technical demonstration of such a system in fiscal year 1995. A successful demonstration could then lead to a joint EMD effort as early as fiscal year 1996.

Therefore, the conferees direct that the:

(1) Army develop an interim BDM system, with total BDM procurement capped at 30,000 rounds;

(2) Army examine its requirements for short-range, anti-tank weapons and report to the congressional defense committees by February 28, 1994;

(3) Army and Marine Corps initiate a joint program to develop a multipurpose warhead for a SRAW variant using MPIM technology;

(4) Marine Corps fully fund and proceed with the three-year engineering and manufacturing system development for the anti-tank version of the SRAW system; and

(5) Secretary of the Army and the Secretary of the Navy to report jointly to the congressional defense committees by April 15, 1994, on the SRAW/MPIM program's schedule, funding requirements, and management structure.

Ship self-defense

The budget request included $237.2 million for ship self-defense in program element 63755N.

The House bill would provide an additional $35.0 million for this program. The House report (H. Rept. 102-200) emphasized the need to manage the ship self-defense and cooperative engagement capability efforts as major defense acquisition programs. The House report also established requirements for the appropriate developmental and operational testing for the ship self-defense systems (SSDS) MK-1 and MK-2, the SLQ-32 electronic countermeasures set, and the rolling airframe missile.

The Senate amendment recommended an additional $28.9 million. The amount included $11.0 million to accelerate quick reaction combat capability (QRCC) testing, $11.7 million for continued development and testing of the NULKA active decoy system, and $6.2 million for a classified program.

The conferees agree to provide an additional $19.1 million for ship self-defense. The amount includes $11.0 million for expediting the Navy's QRCC testing effort, and $8.1 million for NULKA decoy testing and integration.

The conferees endorse the House report's position on management of the ship self-defense and cooperative engagement capability programs. In a constrained budget environment, the Navy must establish a self-defense baseline for each class of ship and manage the development of the system and its component elements to that baseline. The Navy must maintain stable and realistic funding in both programs. To this end, the conferees direct the Navy to provide a report detailing its long-term plans for ship self-defense which details these plans and answers the questions raised in the House report.

Navy surface fire support

The budget request included $17.2 million for gun weapons system technology.

The House bill recommended a $7.5 million increase in this program for the WARSHIPS project to improve Navy surface fire support capabilities.

The Senate amendment would approve the requested amount.

The Senate recedes.

The conferees believe that a number of programs show promise for helping to solve the Navy's fire support requirements: (1) the demonstration of the Army's tactical missile system (ATACMS) fired from a naval ship; (2) the cooperative navy/Defense Nuclear Agency electro-thermal chemical gun technology program; (3) advanced technology gun systems under development by the Army that might be applied to the Navy; and (4) improvements being considered for the Standard and Tomahawk missiles.

These programs set the stage for an advanced Navy surface fire support program which should fulfill the initiative the defense authorizing committees began three years ago. The conferees expect the Navy to pursue aggressively this program for improving the Navy's surface fire support of amphibious operations.

Space and electronic warfare architecture

The budget request included $12.2 million to expand space and electronic warfare

(SEW) and COPERNICUS studies and technology demonstrations.

The House bill would authorize $7.2 million, a $5.0 million reduction to slow excessive concept study developments.

The Senate amendment approved the requested amount.

The conferees agree the Navy and Joint Staff should continue to pursue new solutions to information management shortfalls, and recommend a $10.2 million authorization for theater mission planning efforts.

Advanced deployable system

The budget request contained $133.8 million for the Navy's fixed distributed system, of which $33.3 million would be used to begin the prototype development of an advanced deployable system (ADS). ADS would satisfy the Navy's emerging undersea surveillance challenges for setting up operations quickly in Third World scenarios.

The House bill would authorize $18.3 million for ADS, a $15.0 million reduction. The House report (H. Rept. 103-200) recommended the reduction to curtail investments in architecture studies for ADS prototyping until the Navy can evaluate the results of the fixed distributed system-deployable (FSD-D) test.

The Senate amendment would authorize the requested amount.

The conferees agree that it would be prudent to first evaluate the performance of key technologies being used in the shallow water FSD-D tests before adopting an ADS prototype architecture. Therefore, the conferees agree to a $9.2 million reduction in the budget request to await the results of the sea trials.

Tomahawk cruises missile program

The House report (H. Rept. 103-200) included a request that the Secretary of the Navy provide a report with the submission of the fiscal year 1995 budget dealing with various aspects of the Tomahawk cruise missile program. The House report requests information on the requirements for future production, development, and upgrade programs for the Tomahawk.

The Senate report (S. Rept. 103-113) contained no similar request.

The conferees agree that the Navy should reassess its inventory and upgrade requirements for this important weapon system.

Small arms development

The budget request included $24.3 million for Marine Corps ground combat/supporting arms systems.

The House bill would transfer $42.0 million for Marine Corps small arms development programs to the joint service small arms program. The House report (H. Rept. 103-200) expressed the view that small arms development programs within the Department of Defense are needlessly fragmented.

The Senate amendment contained no similar recommendation.

The House recedes.

The conferees agree that small arms development programs are fragmented. The conferees endorse the report request in the House report, which called for an assessment of the overall small arms program, including the effectiveness of the joint service small arms program.

Marine Corps tactical exploitation of national capabilities

The budget request included $1.3 million for Marine Corps tactical exploitation of national capabilities (TENCAP) initiatives.

The House bill recommended a $3.0 million increase to enhance the Marine Corps' ability to exploit intelligence information acquired from national reconnaissance systems.

The Senate amendment approved the requested amount.

The Senate recedes. The conferees are also pleased with the Marine Corps intelligence roadmap that responds to congressional concerns. The conferees expect the Marines to adopt innovative measures to ensure that a sufficient number of trained intelligence professionals are assigned to operational and joint commands.

RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT, AIR FORCE

Overview

The budget request for fiscal year 1994 contained an authorization of $13,695.0 million for Air Force research, development, test and evaluation. The House bill would authorize $13,446.6 million. The Senate amendment would authorize $12,681.6 million. The conferees recommend authorization of $12,289.2 million, as delineated in the following table. Unless noted explicitly in the statement of managers, all changes are made without prejudice.

Excimer laser program

The budget request contained $55.415 million for advanced radiation technology (PE 63605F).

The House bill would add: (1) $20.0 million for excimer lasers to continue the fiscal year 1993 program to examine dual-use applications of excimer lasers, and (2) $900,000 for high power microwave technology for a total of $11.6 million.

The Senate amendment contained no similar funding.

The House recedes.

The conferees agree to provide the requested amount and direct that $11.6 million be used for high power microwave technology RDT&E.

Laser communications

The budget request included $1.638 million for the laser communications (LASERCOM) advanced technology development project within the $17.066 million requested for command, control and communications advanced technology development (PE 63789F).

The House bill would authorize a total of $10.3 million for LASERCOM for an advanced technology demonstration of a lightweight, low powered, very high data rate laser communications capability.

The Senate amendment would authorize the requested amount.

The House recedes. The conferees reluctantly agree to authorize only $17.066 million for PE 63789F; however, the conferees direct that up to $1.638 million, the requested amount, be used to complete functional testing and documentation of the laser intersatellite transmission experiment engineering model (LITE EM). The conferees note that approximately $29.0 million has been invested in this project since 1989. Completion of this program would provide an on-the-shelf technology base that would significantly reduce the risk in developing future operational systems for high data rate laser intersatellite communications.

Tactical airborne reconnaissance

The budget request contained funding for various elements of the follow-on tactical reconnaissance system (FOTRS). FOTRS includes two components: an airborne component called the advanced tactical air reconnaissance system (ATARS); and a ground station component called the joint service image processing system (JSIPS).

The Navy requested $30.4 million and the Air Force requested $65.3 million for FOTRS development. The Air Force and the Navy also requested additional JSIPS funding of $8.2 million in their other procurement accounts and $3.1 million in their operation and maintenance accounts.

The House bill would transfer all FOTRS funding to a Defense-wide airborne reconnaissance program. The House report (H. Rept. 103-200) supported an Air Force and contractor decision to cancel work on the ATARS program. The House report also specifically denied funds for the Air Force F-16R program.

The Senate amendment would deny all ATARS funding for fiscal year 1994. The Senate report (S. Rept. 103-112) noted that $53.9 million in fiscal year 1992 ATARS procurement funds remain unobligated. The Senate report directed the Marine Corps to use these funds to field an ATARS alternative on the F/A-18D reconnaissance-capable (RC) aircraft using government-owned hardware available from the ATARS program. The conferees understand that the Department has reprogrammed the fiscal year 1992 funding identified in the Senate report.

The conferees are disappointed that the Air Force is left with little more than boxes of unassembled components to show for the ATARS program efforts. The Navy/Marine Corps team, which has faithfully funded and executed its portion of FOTRS development, has made more progress. The Marine Corps has already successfully flown an ATARS sensor package of the F/A-18D(RC) in a series of flights from the Naval Air Warfare Center, Patuxent River, Maryland.

Elsewhere in this statement of the managers, the conferees have required the Secretary of Defense to organize a new management structure for a tactical reconnaissance office (TRO). The conferees expect that the result of a Navy near-term ATARS program will become a part of this effort.

Accordingly, the conferees agree to provide $78.1 million in a new Defense Agencies development line under TRO direction. This will support: (1) fielding a near-term ATARS capability, as described below ($34.0 million); (2) developing an electro-optical long-range oblique photographic sensor (EO-LOROPS) ($17.1 million); and (3) continuing the second phase of the F/A-18D radar upgrade (RUG) program ($27.0 million).

The conferees agree that the Navy, under TRO direction, should complete integration, development, and fielding of an ATARS sensor suite. The conferees expect the Navy to base and field this sensor suite on existing, government-owned ATARS hardware by fiscal year 1995. For this purpose, the conferees direct the Secretary of Defense to transfer remaining ATARS hardware and equipment from the Department of the Air Force to the Department of the Navy. The conferees direct that none of the funds made available to the Navy be used to increase the capability of the baseline sensor suite.

The conferees further direct the Secretary of Defense to present a road map for implementation of these sensor suites in the F/A-18D(RC) to the congressional defense and intelligence committees with the submission of the fiscal year 1995 budget request. The conferees expect that this plan will reflect a streamlined acquisition strategy, leading to a near-term fielding of ATARS. Along with this road map, the conferees direct the Secretary of Defense to fully delineate the extent to which EO-LOROPS will be used to support any long-range, next-generation tactical reconnaissance efforts. Accordingly, the conferees further direct that none of the funds provided for EO-LOROPS development in fiscal year 1994 may be obligated until the road map for sensor implementation, containing a fielding plan and a future years defense program commitment for EO-LOROPS, is submitted.

The conferees agree to provide no funding for F-16R integration under the Air Force FOTRS program. However, the conferees fully support the continued development of JSIPS by providing $19.1 million in a tactical reconnaissance ground station line in the research and development, Defense Agencies account. This amount is derived by shifting $16.0 million from Air Force FOTRS and $3.1 million from Navy JSIPS development accounts. Additionally, the conferees direct that $8.2 million from JSIPS efforts in Air Force and Navy other procurement accounts be moved to a Defense Agencies procurement account for tactical reconnaissance ground stations. For operational reasons, the conferees believe that the O&M accounts should remain with the respective services.

Finally, the conferees direct the Secretary of Defense to continue to redefine a joint program for fielding a long-term ATARS follow-on.

Air Force tactical exploitation of national capabilities

The budget request included $14.7 million for the Air Force tactical exploitation of national capabilities (TENCAP) program. The funds would accelerate development of prototype TENCAP systems in order to enhance national sensor-to-shooter operational techniques, and provide TENCAP technical support for exercises and contingencies.

The House bill recommended an $8.0 million reduction to the request because the program lacked specific goals and objectives.

The Senate amendment approved the requested amount.

The conferees were encouraged by the Air Force's willingness to commit to a credible TENCAP program. The conferees, however, are concerned about the Air Force's failure to detail a program based upon clear goals and objectives during the budget review process. Therefore, the conferees recommend a $9.7 million authorization, a $5.0 million reduction to the budget request. The conferees are willing to consider a reprogramming action if the Air Force believes it can justify additional funding in fiscal year 1994.

Satellite control network

The Air Force spends approximately $650 million each year on research, development, test and evaluation (RDT&E), procurement, and operation and maintenance (O&M) of the satellite control network (SCN).

The Senate report (S. Rept. 103-112) concluded that budget pressures will make it difficult to sustain this level of expenditure. Technology exists that could significantly reduce O&M costs and improve effectiveness, and development programs could be accelerated by reducing O&M budgets modestly. The Senate amendment therefore recommended reducing the O&M request for the SCN by $20.0 million and transferring this amount to RDT&E. Additionally, the Senate amendment recommended a separate line item for these development efforts.

The House bill and report (H. Rept. 103-200) took no similar action.

The Senate recedes in the expectation that RDT&E funding for new development would not be made available.

The conferees urge the Air Force to define better a program of development to achieve cost savings in the satellite control network as soon as possible and to carefully examine whether the SCN O&M budget can support offsetting funding. The conferees further urge the Air Force to ensure that the SCN program office utilize the technical expertise of the Phillips and Rome laboratories in this area.

Test and evaluation

The House report (H. Rept. 103-200) provided obligation and expenditure thresholds for the Air Force test and evaluation request and required notification to the congressional defense committees before the Air Force sought to obligate funds other than those indicated in the fiscal year 1994 budget request.

The Senate report (S. Rept. 103-112) contained no similar direction.

The conferees endorse the House report's direction with the stipulation that the budget baseline and resulting thresholds which require notification to the congressional defense committees be adjusted on a prorated basis, as necessary, to reflect actual fiscal year 1994 authorized and appropriated amounts, whichever is higher, for the program elements.

Astronomy-oriented science center

The conferees understand that competition for the astronomy-oriented science center funded in the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1993 has been hampered by restrictive interpretations of previously established congressional conditions. Therefore, the conferees agree to clarify that the awarding of the grant shall be contingent upon the availability of matching, non-federal funds which may include essentially equivalent contributions of funds, in-kind services, equipment, and land (including long-term leases of real estate).

RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT, DEFENSE-WIDE Overview

The budget request for fiscal year 1994 contained an authorization of $10,174.5 million for Defense-wide research, development, test and evaluation. The House bill would authorize $10,029.4 million. The Senate amendment would authorize $9,510.7 million. The conferees recommend authorization of $8,787.7 million, as delineated in the following table. Unless noted explicitly in the statement of managers, all changes are made without prejudice.

Department of Defense Dependent Schools Director's Fund for Science, Mathematics, and Engineering

The budget request contained no funds for the DODDS Director's Fund for Science, Mathematics, and Engineering.

The House bill contained no funds for the DODDS Director's Fund.

The Senate amendment contained $20.0 million for the DODDS Director's Fund in PE 61102D.

The conferees agree that $20.0 million should be authorized for the DODDS Director's Fund from the funds contained in PE 61103D. The conferees note that this program, which advances science, mathematics, and engineering, is the primary source of funds for the DODDS Director to improve the educational opportunities for the thousands of American children serving overseas with their parents. The conferees direct the Director, Defense Research and Engineering to work closely with the DODDS Director to ensure that these funds are made promptly available to DODDS.

The conferees further direct that DODDS should work closely with the Department of Education to ensure that innovative DODDS initiatives are made available to the education community at the earliest possible date.

Computer-assisted education

The budget request contained no funds for computer-assisted education.

The House bill contained no funds for this program.

The Senate amendment contained $20.0 million for this program.

The conferees recommend $20.0 million in PE 611103D for computer-assisted education. The conferees also direct that $2.0 million of the funds in PE 62601F be used to fund the Air Force outreach program to install computer-assisted mathematics programs in high schools.

The conferees note that the President's February 22, 1993 report entitled "Technology for America's Economic Growth: A New Direction to Build Economic Strength" provides a vision for the use of technology to support the educational challenges of the future. The conferees believe that the computer-assisted education initiative should draw from the experiences and successes of Department of Defense research and development programs. Past developments in the DOD Defense Modeling and Simulation Office have demonstrated that innovative education and training technologies can provide: (1) learning tailored to individual needs; (2) hands on experiences that challenge users to reach for new educational opportunities; and (3) training that is adaptable, cost-effective, and available to everyone, regardless of their location. The Department of Defense, working with the Office of Science and Technology Policy's technology for education and training initiative, should pursue the transfer and tailoring of this research and development to meet the learning needs of all Americans.

The conferees recommend that the computer-assisted education initiative serve as an example of the use of federal and non-federal research and development funds that stimulate education and training technologies. All contracts and grants awarded as a result of this program should be awarded competitively and should include cost sharing with nonfederal sources where possible.

Funding for Technical Support Working Group

The Technical Support Working Group (TSWG) is an interagency organization that coordinates counter-terrorist research and developments efforts among the Departments of Defense and State and other federal agencies. The TSWG is funded by the two departments and has supported the development of innovative security technologies to counter terrorism.

For fiscal year 1993, $10.0 million in Department of Defense funds were authorized and appropriated for the TSWG—$3 million of this amount was designated for cooperative counter-terrorist research projects with NATO and major non-NATO allies. Unfortunately, the budget request for fiscal year 1994 did not sustain this level of funding. It contained only $6.2 million in DOD funds for the TSWG.

The conferees agree that the budget request for the TSWG is insufficient to both continue current projects and start new ones in fiscal year 1994. Because this problem was not raised in a timely manner, the conferees were unable to recommend additional funds for this important activity. However, the conferees encourage the Department of Defense to reprogram additional funds into the TSWG from lower-priority activities.

Global nuclear non-proliferation seismic monitoring

The budget request included $25.895 million for development and testing technologies related to global nuclear nonproliferation seismic monitoring.

The House bill would authorize $48.975 million in the following program elements.

Program element	Requested amount	House authorization
602301E	$21,486,000	$35,486,000
601102F	4,409,000	11,409,000
602101F	80,000	2,080,000

The Senate amendment would authorize the requested amounts.

The House recedes.

The conferees support the Department of Defense goal to develop a coordinated plan to provide the advanced seismic and other technologies needed to negotiate and verify a Comprehensive Test Ban Treaty (CTBT). The conferees believe that it is important that Congress be kept informed of DOD and intelligence community (IC) plans to achieve a monitoring capability for a verifiable CTBT. The Secretary of Defense shall submit a report, not later than 120 days after the date of the enactment of this act, describing the Department's plans to develop advanced technologies for the monitoring of a CTBT and the degree to which other U.S. government departments, other nations, and international organizations could share the costs of this effort. The report shall:

(1) address the major technical issues that are obstacles to effective U.S. monitoring of a CTBT;

(2) describe the overall DOD CTBT verification readiness plan for resolving these technical issues, coordinating the efforts within DOD and other departments and agencies, and establishing a timetable to transfer the developed technologies to operational monitoring agencies;

(3) describe the roles of DOD organizations, the military services, other U.S. government agencies and international organizations, as applicable, in carrying out the plan, including their program funding and cost sharing; and

(4) be submitted in an unclassified form and, as necessary, in classified form to the congressional defense committees.

ARPA tactical technology

The House bill included $162.6 million for tactical technology (PE 62702E), $18.75 million above the requested level for four different projects.

The Senate amendment would authorize the requested amount.

The conferees agree that, of the amount requested, $1.75 million can be utilized to complete development and conduct an evaluation and test of the advanced landing system. Further, if the Secretary of Defense determines that a post-launch destruct demonstration is warranted, funding for this demonstration can be provided from this program element.

Radar absorbing materials

The budget request included $7.38 million to develop cost-effective enabling technologies for aircraft and missiles.

The House bill would add $5.5 million to PE 62702E, tactical technology, for micro-balloon, spray-on, and other related radar-absorbing materials technologies to increase system survivability and reduce costs compared to current radar absorbing materials.

The Senate amendment contained no funding for this program.

The conferees agree to authorize the funding contained in the House bill. They further agree to provide $5.5 million for radar absorbing materials, as described in the House report (H. Rept. 103-200), from within the funds authorized in PE 62702E, tactical technology.

ARPA materials and electronics technology

The House bill included $276.2 million for materials and electronics technology (PE 62712E), $77.7 million above the requested amount.

The Senate amendment included $235.0 million for this purpose.

The conferees agree to a $260.0 million authorization for this program element. The conference agreement includes $22.0 million for continuous fiber metal matrix composite manufacturing; $15.0 million for electronic packaging materials, cryoassemblies, and dielectrics; $12.0 million for system optimization investigations; $2.1 million for infrastructure development; $5.0 million for photovoltaic research; and $5.0 million for ceramics, intermetallics and high performance metal alloys called for in the House report (H. Rept. 103-200).

The conferees direct that competitive procedures be utilized for any new projects undertaken under this program element and that cost-sharing be required for dual-use projects that have strong commercial potential.

Fuel cell research

The budget request contained no funds for fuel cell development even though the Department of Defense has several on-going fuel cell research programs.

The House bill contained $50.0 million for fuel cell research and recommended that a single office within the Advanced Research Projects Agency (ARPA) manage fuel cell development for the Department of Defense.

The Senate amendment contained: (1) $14.5 million to fund the second year of a competitively awarded, four-year program to develop a two megawatt scale natural gas-fed fuel cell; and (2) $4.0 million to continue development of a solid polymer fuel cell for unmanned undersea vehicle technology.

The conferees recommend that $20.0 million be authorized for fuel cell development. The conferees agree that fuel cell management should be centralized within ARPA and that the $20.0 million should be allocated to programs in accordance with the Senate Report (S. Rept. 103-112) and the House Report (H. Rept. 103-200).

Advanced theater air management

The Department of Defense recently completed the Bottom-Up Review (BUR) of future defense needs which included an evaluation of theater air modernization programs. The conferees are aware that, as a result of the BUR, the Department has decided to terminate the AFX (the Navy follow-on for the A-6), and the multi-role fighter (MRF), the Air Force follow-on for the F-16). Additionally, the BUR recommended continued development of the F-22 for the Air Force and the F/A-18E&F for the Navy; retirement of the Navy's A-6, and in lieu, marginal air-to-ground upgrades for the F-14; and, termination of U.S. procurement of the F-16 for the Air Force. Finally, the BUR recommended development of a joint service plan which would propose an advanced theater air management effort to be called the joint advanced strike technology (JAST) program.

The Department has described the scope of the JAST program to include:

(1) development of a catalogue of common components, such as engines, avionics, and ground test and training equipment that will be required for future aircraft;

(2) development of precision guided munitions and advanced mission planning techniques;

(3) demonstration of advanced aircraft concepts; and,

(4) examination of both manned and unmanned system concepts.

The conferees believe, however, that a viable advanced theater air management program must directly resolve the problem of how to define a theater air capability that will meet military requirements at an affordable cost.

The Department floated a "trial balloon" earlier this year that represented an attempt to combine the two very different operational requirements for the AFX and MRF. This concept, the joint attack fighter (JAF), quickly generated opposition. No one could explain a plausible concept of how a single aircraft could satisfy the disparate capabilities provided by a light-weight single engine fighter with a long range, deep strike interdiction aircraft.

Therefore, the conferees do not support an advanced theater air management concept, such as JAST, which appears to use technology rollover as a means of "treading water" over several more years, and then leads only to a JAF of a different color. By the same token, the conferees would also resist any effort which becomes a "science fair" project that has no hope of yielding any fully integrated aircraft for more than 20 years. In short, the conferees cannot support such efforts. Vague, unchanneled, and ill-defined research planning is essentially "eating our own seed corn."

The conferees are also concerned about the "technology catalogue" approach for other reasons. Historically, tactical aircraft have always been highly optimized designs balancing capability against cost and physical constraints. Therefore, the conferees are concerned over how the Department will know 20 years in advance whether generic components can be incorporated in combat aircraft designs which have historically demanded optimized subsystems. A strong advanced theater air management program should carefully balance any compromises among performance, generic commonality, and cost.

For example, the conferees understand that the Department intends to make engine technology development a central thrust of its proposed JAST program. This fact gives rise to several questions which demonstrate the concern of the conferees:

(1) How do we judge the quality of a design for a new engine in the absence of at least some idea about what kind of an application we intend for it?

(2) As engines are designed around specific goals of thrust, dynamic performance, and aircraft range, how will we know today what operating conditions we seek in 20 years if we do not know what kind of aircraft we want to build?

(3) If we know now what kind of aircraft we want to build in 20 years, why not set our course now on a specific engine design that will match and support that purpose?

(4) Conversely, if we do not know what kind of an aircraft we will need in 20 years, how can a set of generic engines solve a problem we cannot define now?

(5) Even if we can specify the aircraft which we will need 5-10 years from now, how can we be certain that the airframe will be suited to the output of the generic engine development program we will start before then?

The conferees continue to believe that there are at least two sets of distinct missions that will require different airframe and technology combinations:

(1) a single engine, single seat, "low-end" multi-role aircraft (such as represented by the MRF; the advanced short takeoff vertical landing (ASTOVL) development; and, a conventional takeoff and landing (CTOL) variant of ASTOVL); and,

(2) a multi-engine, dual seat, "high-end" strike aircraft (which satisfies the operational requirements of an AFX, and is highly compatible with F-22 technology).

The conferees therefore expect joint aircraft development to lead to flying prototypes of the classes of aircraft identified as required by the Department. Such a program should provide a clear path by which technology could be developed and matured in an affordable way to meet operational requirements.

The conferees believe that more ground-work is necessary. The Department needs to establish an appropriate management infrastructure to ensure that the concept and goals of an advanced theater air management effort are well-founded.

Accordingly, the conferees provide no funding for the JAST program in fiscal year 1994 but instead provide $10.0 million to organize an advanced theater air management office. In addition, the conferees agree to authorize $36.0 million for the Secretary of Defense to continue ASTOVL development. The ASTOVL funding is comprised of $11.0 million of Navy-requested ASTOVL development which complements $19.0 million in the ARPA request. The conferees agree to provide an additional $6.0 million to ARPA for ASTOVL to evaluate the direct lift concept along with the two lift fan efforts being considered. The conferees note, however, that ASTOVL technology, or other advanced concepts, must be embraced by more than one military service for the Congress to support program funding in future years. The budget environment will not permit the luxury of a one-for-one replacement of aircraft for any single military service or mission area.

In conclusion, the conferees direct the Secretary of Defense to work closely with the congressional defense committees and oversee incorporation of the solutions to the concerns raised by this statement of the managers.

Experimental evaluation of major innovative technologies

The budget request included $512.2 million for PE 632226E.

The House bill would authorize $613.1 million for the experimental evaluation of major innovative technologies at the Advanced Research Projects Agency (ARPA) (PE 63226E), $100.9 million above the requested amount.

The Senate amendment would authorize $518.3 million.

The conferees agree to authorize $529.188 million. The conference agreement would authorize $20.0 million for fuel cell technology, $30.0 million for electric vehicle technology, $14.7 million for Project Compass, $54.0 million for advanced simulation technology, $25.7 million for the advanced short takeoff and vertical landing program, $5.0 million for gamma-gamma resonance imaging, $2.0 million for fire protection technology, and $1.0 million for nuclear waste monitoring. The conferees would not authorize funds for airship technology or SELENE. The conferees direct that competitive procedures be utilized for any new projects undertaken under this program element, and that cost-sharing be required for dual-use projects with strong commercial potential.

Electric and hybrid powered vehicles

The budget request contained no funding for electric vehicle research.

The House bill contained $50.0 million for electric vehicles in PE 603226E.

The Senate amendment contained no funding for the program.

The conferees note that the executive branch has joined forces with the automotive industry in the so-called "clean car initiative", also known as the "next generation vehicle". The goal of this effort is to have a coordinated cooperative research and development effort that will achieve the automotive technology of the future. The initiative has short, medium, and long-term research objectives and includes participation by Department of Defense R&D facilities and personnel. Moreover, this initiative emphasizes a number of promising future technologies, including hybrid powered vehicles, advanced batteries, and fuel cells.

The conferees also note that the Department of Energy is applying approximately $25.0 million in fiscal year 1994 funding to electric vehicle research.

The conferees support the Administration's efforts and commend the clean car initiative as an appropriate way to coordinate federal and private efforts to develop future automotive technology, including dual-use technologies and processes that will be advantageous to the military and transferable to civilian industry.

The conferees recommend a $30.0 million authorization for continued electric and hybrid vehicle research and demonstration. The program should be coordinated with the clean car initiative and focus on advanced battery technology, hybrid powered vehicles, and fuel cells for military application. The Advanced Research Project Agency should implement the program in a partnership with the Army's Tank Automotive Command. The conferees also direct that all funds for this program shall be awarded competitively, and that this dual-use research be conducted on a cost-shared basis wherever possible.

Operational airship demonstration

The House bill recommended $20.0 million for an operational airship demonstration. The demonstration would prove the feasibility of using an airship to support over-the-horizon (OTH) engagement of low flying cruise missiles by surface- or land-based surface-to-air weapons systems.

The Senate amendment contained no similar recommendation.

The House recedes.

The conferees recommend that the Navy assess the potential contribution that airships could make to the airborne component of the ship self-defense/cooperative engagement capability. The Navy should assess the role of such airborne platforms as part of its overall system architecture. The conferees direct the Secretary of the Navy to provide this assessment to the congressional defense committees in the 1994 annual report on the ship self-defense/cooperative engagement capability program.

Strategic environmental research and development program

The budget request contained $97.0 million for the strategic environmental research and development program (SERDP).

The House bill included $120.0 million for SERDP and directed the SERDP Council to consider funding a series of specific projects.

The Senate amendment included $200.0 million for the program.

The conferees recommend $150.0 million for the program. The conferees note that the SERDP Council considers all projects submitted to it on a merit basis. The Council should consider the projects mentioned in the House report (H. Rept. 103-200), if submitted, as it would any other proposal.

Focus Hope

The budget request contained $5.0 million for Focus Hope in PE 603226E.

The House bill would create a separate funding line for Focus Hope and provide $20.0 million in funds.

The Senate amendment would create a separate funding line and add $15.0 million to bring the total funding for Focus Hope to $20.0 million.

The Senate recedes.

Biological integrated detection systems (BIDS)

The budget request included $60.0 million to develop systems to detect, identify, warn, and verify a biological attack. Out of the amount requested, $26.3 million would be for research and development of technologies to perform area and point detection. Of the remaining funds, $33.0 million would be used for procuring non-developmental strategic stand-off detection systems and 38 commercially mature, non-developmental biological integrated detection systems. This procurement would integrate existing biological measuring instrumentation into M789 shelters mounted on M1097 heavy high mobility multi-purpose wheeled vehicles.

The House bill would authorize the requested amount.

The Senate amendment would not provide funds for this program.

The conferees agree to provide $12.0 million for research and development of the program and $15.0 million for procurement of the non-developmental biological integrated detection systems. The conferees direct the Department of Defense to keep the congressional defense committees informed on the program's progress. The conferees direct the Secretary of Defense to ensure that an operational test and evaluation is conducted prior to the procurement of additional systems beyond the fiscal year 1994 request.

ARPA manufacturing technology

The budget request contained $299.6 million for the Advanced Research Projects Agency (ARPA) manufacturing technology program element (PE 63739E).

The House bill would authorize $394.6 million, an addition of $95.0 million above the requested amount for x-ray lithography research.

The Senate amendment included $306.6 million.

The conferees agree to authorize $342.3 million for ARPA manufacturing technology. The additional funds are for advanced lithography and environmentally conscious electronics systems manufacturing. The conferees direct that those funds be expended in partnership with industry in areas where there is a strong likelihood that the technology to be developed will be put into practice in American industry and will benefit American industry in global commercial competition.

The conferees direct that competitive procedures be utilized for any new projects undertaken under this program element and that cost-sharing be considered and required where practical for dual-use projects with strong commercial potential.

SEMATECH

The budget request contained $100.0 million in PE 63745E for the semiconductor manufacturing technology consortium (SEMATECH).

The House bill would authorize $100.0 million for the Advanced Research Projects Agency's (ARPA) contribution to SEMATECH. The House report (H. Rept. 103-200) mandated that at least 10 percent of that sum be used to explore the use of more environmentally safe materials in semiconductor manufacturing processes. The House report also required the Secretary of Defense to report on SEMATECH's environmental activities with particular emphasis on ozone-depleting substances by March 30, 1994.

The Senate amendment would authorize $90.0 million for SEMATECH.

The conference agreement includes $90.0 million for SEMATECH. The conferees agree that at least $9.0 million should be used for environmentally conscious manufacturing research. Because the semiconductor industry generates only one percent of all ozone-depleting substances released by U.S. industry, the conferees agree that the House-required report should discuss the principal environmental challenges the semiconductor industry faces and SEMATECH's plans for addressing those challenges in partnership with other industry and federal activities. The conferees recognize the importance of input from citizen groups but do not authorize use of SEMATECH funds to pay for citizen group involvement in preparing this report.

Software reuse technology adoption program

The budget request included $9.151 million for the DOD consolidated software initiative.

The House bill would authorize an additional $7.5 million in PE 063756D, the DOD consolidated software initiative, for the software reuse technology adoption program.

The Senate amendment would authorize an additional $7.5 million in PE 060321E computing systems/communications technology, for the software reuse technology adoption program.

The conferees agree to continue support for the Advanced Research Projects Agency (ARPA) reuse technology adoption program and provide $7.5 million in PE 063756D. The conferees encourage cost-sharing in this program.

Rocket motor demilitarization

The budget request included $12.267 million in PE 64704D to continue the investigation of disposal methods for the growing surplus of high-energy explosives.

The House bill would authorize $15.267 million for this program and would include funding for the demilitarization and reclamation of materials by using cryofracture technology at the Army Longhorn Ammunition Facility and at the Nevada Test Site.

The Senate amendment contained no similar funding.

The Senate recedes. The conferees also support a demonstration project at the Sunflower Army Ammunition Plant involving dry machine removal of solid propellant from rocket motors for commercial reuse.

Unmanned aerial vehicle program

The budget request contained $69.3 million for procurement of remotely piloted vehicles and $180.1 million for research and development within the unmanned aerial vehicle (UAV) joint program office (JPO).

The House bill would authorize the procurement request. However, the House bill would deny all research and development funding for the JPO. The House report (H. Rept. 103-200) endorsed the Department of Defense's plan to upgrade the short-range UAV with the common automated recovery system (CARS).

The Senate amendment would add $20.0 million to the procurement request. Out of that total, $15.0 million would be provided to buy additional spares and replacement part inventories to improve Pioneer UAV readiness. The remaining $5.0 million would be provided to procure the common automatic recovery system (CARS) as government-furnished equipment to facilitate government integration into the short-range UAV program.

The Senate amendment also would reduce JPO research and development funding by $26.0 million. This reduction would account for delays within the medium-range UAV program. The Senate amendment would permit the JPO to use up to $40.0 million to support the Department's so-called "Tier II" effort to field tactical endurance UAV.

The conferees agree to provide the $20.0 million in additional UAV procurement funds to be obligated as recommended in the Senate report (S. Rept. 103-112).

The conferees have repeatedly expressed concern about the lack of progress the UAV JPO is making. The conferees have also expressed disappointment with the proliferation of unique vehicle programs which have been designed to fill disparate categories of requirements. Both the Senate and the House of Representatives have previously directed the JPO to focus on the expedited fielding of a smaller number of UAV systems, while emphasizing inter-operability and commonality.

The conferees believe that further efforts to develop and field the close-range UAV and the medium-range UAV would be redundant and unaffordable. The conferees reach this conclusion based on several factors: (1) severe fiscal constraints throughout the Department; (2) the emergence of the Tier II tactical endurance UAV program; (3) advances within the development of a short-range UAV system; and (4) recent Air Force and Navy policy decisions which indicate withdrawal of support for the medium-range UAV program.

Therefore, the conferees agree to provide $113.4 million for research and development, a $66.7 million reduction from the request. In so doing, the conferees also agree to deny the $28.8 million requested for close-range UAV development and limit the medium-range UAV funding to $14.0 million. The conferees expect the Department to use this $14.0 million to terminate the program.

Further, the conferees direct the Department to use funds provided in this program to begin the Tier II tactical endurance UAV program and to conduct an independent cost estimate of the total Tier II program. The conferees expect the Department will establish an advanced concept technology demonstration (ACTD) to fill the requirement for the long-endurance mission. The conferees direct the Department to move on an expedited basis to sign contracts for the Tier II ACTD within 40 days of enactment of this act. The conferees agree that this program shall be limited to a scope of not more than 10 air vehicles and three ground stations.

The conferees direct the Department to ensure that the ground station support for both the tactical endurance UAV and the short-range UAV programs have a common architecture.

Finally, the conferees believe that the Department needs a totally new management structure for tactical reconnaissance. As discussed elsewhere in this statement of managers, the conferees believe that programs for unmanned reconnaissance, manned reconnaissance, sensor development, ground station support, and for the fielding of these systems should be incorporated within the Office of the Under Secretary of Defense for Acquisition and Technology.

Special operations tactical systems development

The budget request contained $221.305 million for special operations tactical systems development.

The House bill would reduce the requested amount by $9.615 million to delete the funds requested for sustainment engineering support.

The Senate amendment would increase the requested amount by $15.0 million for development of the CV-22 aircraft.

The conferees recommend an authorization of $206.505 million for special operations tactical systems development. The conferees' recommendation would: (1) restore the funds deleted by the House bill for sustainment engineering support; (2) delete the funds added by the Senate amendment for CV-22 development; (3) add $200,000 to modify the M4 carbine for special operations forces; and (4) delete $15.0 million of the amount requested for further development of the JASORS radio. The conferees understand that the Navy has made prior year funds available for continued development of the CV-22 aircraft.

Airborne reconnaissance support program

The budget request included $356.3 million for the airborne reconnaissance support program (ARSP).

The House bill would reduce the request by $20.0 million to enforce fiscal discipline in the ARSP sensor development programs.

The Senate amendment would reduce the request by $207.0 million in order to terminate the advanced airborne reconnaissance system (AARS). This amount includes unobligated prior-year funds.

The conferees agree to authorize $179.3 million for ARSP. The conferees direct that the AARS program be terminated and that available prior-year funds be used to offset other ARSP requirements in fiscal year 1994. The conferees agree to authorize $30.0 million to begin development of an unmanned aerial vehicle that satisfies tactical broad-area imagery collection requirements as defined in the deep target surveillance/reconnaissance alternatives study. The conferees would also consider a reprogramming request for additional funds for this effort.

In addition, the conferees endorse the Department of Defense decision to include the ARSP in a consolidated tactical airborne reconnaissance office.

The conferees understand that the Under Secretary of Defense for Acquisition and Technology is considering terminating an advanced multi-spectral imaging sensor that is being developed for airborne reconnaissance applications.

This program is technically ambitious and would be expensive, but the rewards would also be substantial. Aside from impressive range and coverage improvements, which the Department of Defense and the intelligence community have identified as a key requirement, this system would provide excellent resolution, stereo viewing, and precise geolocation. It would also offer the prospect of major new capabilities through multi-spectral sensing and processing.

The conferees believe it would be premature to terminate this program for several reasons. First, this program appears to be the only DOD development program in multi-spectral imaging and processing designed expressly for military applications. This technology remains largely unexploited, but there are reasons to believe that it could provide remarkable new capabilities. Before the Department terminates this effort, it will need to demonstrate that it has a coherent plan to exploit the potential for multi-spectral sensing.

Second, this program may be terminated because it does not appear to fit with the Department's plans for future collection platforms and their concept of operations. However, it is clear that the Department has yet to define a program for such platforms. The conferees see no point in terminating an ongoing program for a proven collection system in order to use the funds for another effort that has not been defined.

Third, terminating this program would raise fundamental questions about the future of the collection platform on which it would fly. The conferees' experience with the SR-71 serves as a reminder of the pitfalls of failing to keep existing systems up-to-date and capable in the hope of acquiring other capabilities.

Therefore, the conferees direct that no adverse action be taken with respect to the advanced electro-optical imaging program in fiscal year 1994. In addition, the conferees direct the Under Secretary of Defense for Acquisition and Technology, in coordination with the Assistant Secretary of Defense for Command, Control, Communications, and Intelligence, to submit a report to the congressional defense committees on these issues by April 1, 1994. The report should include a description and explanation of the Administration's outyear plans and recommendations.

Strategic environmental research and development program (sec. 203)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 235) that would extend for two years the authority of the executive director of the strategic environmental research and development program (SERDP) to establish pay rates. The provision also would change the SERDP council to reflect a change in the title of two of the SERDP council members.

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 235) that would add the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration as a member of the SERDP council.

The House recedes. There is concern about the management structure of the SERDP program as it matures. Section 1801 of the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1991 (Public Law 101-510), the legislation that created the SERDP, required the appointment of an executive director. In the statement of managers accompanying the conference report (H. Rept. 101-923), the conferees expressed their desire that the executive director position be established in the Senior Executive Service (SES) as soon as possible. Instead of creating a new SES position for the executive director, the previous Department of Defense leadership gave the SERDP executive director's responsibilities to individuals already serving in SES positions. The executive director's responsibilities were merely added to their normal responsibilities. Although both the individuals who have served as executive director have worked very hard to further the program, it is clear that SERDP requires a full-time executive director devoted exclusively to the program. The conferees urge the Secretary of Defense to create the executive director position in the Senior Executive Service and, in consultation with the Secretary of Energy and the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency, to appoint someone to that position as soon as possible.

The conferees also urge the SERDP council to prescribe guidelines that will clarify how universities and the private sector, particularly small and medium-sized businesses, can participate in the program through the submission of research proposals. The proposals must meet the identified needs of the Department of Defense or the joint needs of the Departments of Defense and Energy, and be approved through the normal peer review process. Nevertheless, the conferees are aware of many new, innovative suggestions for environmental restoration activities that could benefit DOD and DOE as they clean up contaminated sites.

The funding the conferees recommend for fiscal year 1994, $150.0 million in research and development, will enable the Department of Defense to continue the programs it began in SERDP phases I and II and to initiate new proposals in all three SERDP research areas in fiscal year 1994. The conferees believe that the Department should focus attention on all three SERDP areas in its SERDP budget request for fiscal year 1995.

Kinetic energy antisatellite program (sec. 211)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 211) that would make $10.0 million available in fiscal year 1994 for engineering development of the most critical antisatellite technologies. Funds could not be made available for obligation for this program until the Secretary of Defense submits the report to Congress required by section 1363 of the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1993 and certifies that there is a requirement for the program.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

Space launch modernization (sec. 213)

The budget request included $53.9 million for the national launch system (NLS) program, $43.3 million for the national aerospace plane (NASP), $58.5 million for medium launch vehicles (MLV) RDT&E, $330.7 million for Titan space launch vehicles RDT&E, and $4.88 million for single-stage rocket technology (SSRT).

The House bill would authorize the requested amount for NLS; add $36.7 million for NASP, $37.0 million for MLV improvements, $15.0 million for a Centaur upper stage processing facility for Titan, and, in a legislative provision (sec 217), $75.0 million for SSRT.

The Senate amendment would deny the request for NLS and NASP, reduce the request for Titan by $24.1 million due to the availability of prior-year funds for upper stage vehicle research, and approve the request for MLV and SSRT. In addition, the Senate amendment would authorize $30.0 million for RDT&E on new launch vehicle technology. The Senate amendment included a provision (sec. 214) that would require the Secretary of Defense to develop a space launch roadmap which focuses available resources on a single development or acquisition effort.

The House recedes on MLV and Titan funding and the provision on SSRT. The House recedes with an amendment on the space launch roadmap provision.

The Senate recedes on prior-year upper stage vehicle funding.

The conferees agree that the national aerospace plane should be phased out in an orderly fashion in fiscal year 1994. The conferees conclude that the Department of Defense cannot afford to pursue an X-plane development program at this time. The conferees do believe that the Department, preferably in cooperation with the National Aeronautics and Space Administration, should retain a vigorous level-of-effort technology program in hypersonic vehicles. Accordingly, the conferees agree to authorize $40.0 million for hypersonic vehicle research. The conferees direct the Secretary of the Air Force to report to the congressional defense committees no later than April 1, 1994, on the allocation of these funds, the funding profile for the balance of the Future Years Defense Program, the goals and objectives of the program, and the relationship between the DOD and NASA programs.

The conferees understand that the President's Science Advisor intends to review national space launch policy and programs again. This review may supersede the recommendations contained in the Department of Defense Bottom Up Review which concluded that the Department could not afford any new launch acquisition programs, despite an acknowledgement of serious deficiencies in space launch capabilities and competitiveness.

To preserve options for the Administration during this planned review, the conferees agree to modify the Senate provision to authorize $35.0 million for space launch modernization for fiscal year 1994, despite the conclusions of the DOD Bottom-Up Review. This amount includes the $4.88 million requested for launch technology within the Ballistic Missile Defense Organization. These funds shall be used to keep the various technology and system options open. The funds shall also be used to complete phase one of the single stage rocket technology program and to continue the space transportation main engine effort.

If the Administration decides to pursue any new technology or acquisition programs, they shall be competitively awarded. The conferees also stress the importance of ensuring that small- and medium-sized companies are able to compete in any new programs.

The conferees agree with the Senate position that the Administration must stop trying to keep multiple space launch programs alive despite ever-dwindling resources. The conferees agree that the Administration must focus scarce resources to achieve any success at all.

The conferees recognize the merits in all the major competing technologies, including airbreathing propulsion, single-stage rocket technology, and rugged expendable concepts. The conferees also recognize that there may be opportunities to improve existing systems in terms of cost, reliability, and responsiveness. At the same time, based on unfortunate experience, the conferees are extremely wary of excessive optimism on costs, schedule, and performance.

The conferees are concerned that the U.S. commercial launch industry is rapidly losing ground to foreign competitors, which in turn is driving up the cost of U.S. government launches. The conferees are also concerned that the existing systems enjoy a near monopoly position for launches of government payloads in their respective weight and volume classes. In addition to offering few incentives for cost control, this situation has resulted in a large excess industrial capacity as the number of actual and planned government satellite launches has declined. In addition, overall, NASA and the Department of Defense have demonstrated a remarkable inability to work together. Across the government, a debilitating culture favors complexity, fragility, and accommodation to unique payload demands. To date, neither the government nor industry has attempted to approach space launch as they do cargo transport by truck, rail, ships, or aircraft. In these areas, standardization, rugged design, performance margins, low cost, and responsiveness are of overriding importance.

These problems are well-known; most, in fact, were addressed by the recent DOD review. The Department concluded, however, that these problems were not pressing enough to warrant a major initiative in the current budget environment.

The conferees fear that this course will lead to an obsolete and ineffective U.S. launch industry over the long term, while national security concerns could preclude significant reliance on foreign systems—despite heavy dependence on foreign sources in other critical defense industries. The conferees expect the Administration to come to grips with these issues and be prepared to present a coherent set of policies and programs to Congress early next year.

It is widely asserted that foreign launch vehicle programs enjoy distinct advantages over U.S. launch systems in terms of cost and responsiveness. The provision would require the Department of Defense to study this issue, in parallel with a National Aeronautics and Space Administration study.

Medical countermeasures against biowarfare threats (sec. 214)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 215) that would authorize no more than $108.3 million for fiscal year 1994 for the medical component of the biological defense research program (BDRP). The provision would also extend through fiscal year 1994 the limitations on the BDRP medical component contained in section 251 of the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Years 1992 and 1993 (Public Law 102-190).

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment that would add a new section on medical countermeasures against biowarfare threats to title 10, United States Code. The statutory requirement would allocate funds appropriated in any fiscal year for the BDRP medical component for the product development, research, development, test, or evaluation of medical countermeasures, to not more than 80 percent for near-term validated biowarfare threat agents and to not more than 20 percent for mid-term or far-term validated biowarfare threat agents.

Federally funded research and development centers (sec. 215)

The budget request contained $1,410 million for federally funded research and development centers (FFRDC). The budget request, however, did not comply with section 2367 of title 10, United States Code, regarding the identification of funding for FFRDCs.

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 213) that would result in a 10 percent or $144.5 million reduction from the fiscal year 1993 funding level for FFRDCs.

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 217) that would result in a six percent reduction in the amount requested for FFRDCs for fiscal year 1994; provide funding and personnel ceilings for each FFRDC; establish a pay freeze for FFRDC employees; and provide waiver authority for breaching the proposed ceiling and payfreeze. The Senate amendment would reduce the amount requested for research, development, test and evaluation by $200.0 million to reflect the lower ceilings and payfreeze.

The conferees recommend a six percent reduction in the requested amount for FFRDC funding. This would establish a $1,352.6 million ceiling for FFRDC funding, the level recommended by the Senate amendment.

The Senate recedes from its provision that would require fixed personnel ceilings. The conferees agree that the Department of Defense should establish individual FFRDC ceilings and report to Congress not later than 30 days after the enactment of this act. The conferees recommend that the Department, in establishing these ceilings, should not reduce each FFRDC by a common percentage. Rather, each ceiling should be calculated based on the Department's needs. The conferees direct that smaller FFRDCs and FFRDCs involved in studies and analyses be reduced by proportionally smaller amounts than the larger FFRDCs. The conferees also agree to drop the Senate provision that would freeze FFRDC employee wages. The conferees, however, agree to a $200.0 million general reduction in funding. The difference between this reduction and the total ceiling reduction will allow the Department of Defense a considerable management reserve in establishing individual ceilings. The conferees also recommend waivers to the ceilings established in this act.

Ballistic missile post-launch destruct mechanism (sec. 216)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 211) that would direct the Secretary of Defense to conduct a demonstration program to develop and test a ballistic missile post-launch destruct mechanism.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment that would authorize the Secretary of Defense to waive the requirement to conduct a demonstration program if he certifies that a demonstration program is not in U.S. national security interests.

High performance computing (sec. 217)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 215) that would mandate a National Research Council review of the high performance computing and communications (HPCC) program.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment. The conferees direct that an interim report be concluded by July 1, 1994 and a final report by February 1, 1995. To meet those deadlines, the Secretary of Defense should proceed within 30 days of enactment of this act to start the NRC study. The House recedes from its recommendation that 50 percent of the funds in the HPCC program element (PE 62301E) not be obligated until the Secretary of Defense submits the report. The conferees agree that $15.0 million dollars of the funds authorized in PE 62301E can be used for applied software engineering.

The conferees authorize $326.3 million in this program element, $42.3 million less than the requested amount. The conferees agree that this reduction is made without prejudice and only as a result of the need to meet the Budget Resolution's outlay target.

Superconducting magnetic energy storage (sec. 218)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 216) that would establish a program office within the Department of the Navy to research superconducting magnetic energy storage (SMES) technology. The provision also would transfer funds from the Defense Nuclear Agency for this purpose and establish an advisory council.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment that would strike the establishment of an advisory council.

Advanced self protection jammer (ASPJ) program (sec. 219)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 220) that would permit the Secretary of Defense to obligate fiscal year 1993 and prior research and development and procurement funds for the advanced self protection jammer (ASPJ). These funds would be for material procurement, logistics support, and the integration of existing ASPJ systems into the F-14D aircraft for testing and evaluation.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

Electronic combat systems testing (sec. 220)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 221) that would prescribe certain testing for electronic combat systems.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

Limitation on flight tests of certain missiles (sec. 221)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 222) that would impose limitations on missile launches for test purposes.

The Senate amendment contained no comparable provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment that would limit, for one year from the date of enactment of this act, any test launches that would release debris within 50 miles of Canyonlands National Park, Utah.

Joint advanced rocket system (sec. 222)

The budget request included $10.9 million for the advanced rocket system (ARS).

The House bill and the Senate amendment would approve the requested amount.

The House report (H. Rept. 103-200) noted that in the statement of managers (H. Rept. 102-966) accompanying the conference report on the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1993 (Public Law 102-484), the conferees directed the Department of Defense to provide the congressional defense committees with a joint cost and operational effectiveness analysis, a joint hypervelocity rocket technology evaluation, and a joint program consolidation plan for the ARS program. The House report also indicated that the Department did not provide the required documents. The House report would restrict the Department from obligating the fiscal year 1994 funds until 30 days after the Department had provided the requested reports.

The conferees agree to a provision that would restrict obligation of: (1) Navy funds for the ARS program; and (2) Army funds for the missile and rocket advanced technology program. The Department would not be permitted to obligate more than 75 percent of the authorized amount until 30 days after the Department of Defense submits the specified reports to the congressional defense committees.

Standoff air-to-surface munitions technology demonstration (sec. 223)

The budget request contained $80.5 million for the Navy and $24.6 million for the Air Force to support those services' respective portion of joint standoff air-to-surface munitions development.

The House bill and Senate amendment would approve this request.

The conferees continue to support development of the joint standoff weapon (JSOW). The conferees, however, believe the Department of Defense should evaluate interim alternatives that offer accelerated fielding of JSOW-like capability. The conferees have been informed that there may be adaptor kit alternatives which could accomplish this inexpensively.

Accordingly, the conferees agree to authorize up to $2.0 million each for the Navy and the Air Force from within available funds to conduct a technology demonstration. The conferees agree that the Secretary of the Navy, acting as executive agent, should:

(1) Issue a request for information (RFI) about non-developmental adapter kits for existing unguided munitions (1,000 pound class and below);

(2) Judge the merit in any responses and, if the Secretary finds merit, select a contractor to conduct a technical demonstration; and,

(3) Submit a report to the congressional defense committees detailing the potential integration costs, demonstration results, and applicability of any possible near-term precision guidance capability.

If the Secretary of the Navy determines that further evaluation is not warranted, the Navy and Air Force should apply remaining funds to other requirements in the JSOW program. The Secretary should notify the congressional defense committees of such a decision.

If the Secretary decides to conduct a technical demonstration, the Secretary should develop a program that takes into account: (1) government-furnished equipment, such as transponders, inert munitions, and test ranges and facilities; and (2) contractor-furnished equipment and services, such as appropriate test aircraft, global positioning navigation systems, telemetry integration, range safety plans, and data reduction.

Extremely high frequency communications (sec. 224)

The Senate report (S. Rept. 103-112) directed the Department of Defense to adopt a single waveform standard for extremely high frequency communications. The Senate amendment also would reduce the $55.8 million request for Navy satellite communications by $43.0 million due to the availability of prior-year funds.

The House report (H. Rept. 103-200) and House bill did not take similar actions.

The House recedes.

The conferees agree that legislation is required to ensure effective implementation of a single waveform standard. In addition, the conferees direct the Under Secretary of Defense for Acquisition and Technology to address the technical and programmatic issues that must be resolved to achieve a common waveform that satisfies defense-wide requirements. In particular, the conferees direct the Under Secretary to formally review the waveform technology performance advantages developed by the Ballistic Missile Defense Organization for propagation through jamming, rain, and atmospheric ionization. The Under Secretary should evaluate the cost-effectiveness of these performance advantages, whether this performance is required for missile defense and other missions, and whether this technology could be incorporated into the Milstar waveform to achieve compatibility with Milstar terminals. The Under Secretary shall report the results of this review to the congressional defense committees by June 1, 1994.

The reduction to the Navy's Milstar terminal program would be taken without prejudice; the conferees intend that the requested amount be provided for the program.

The conferees also agree to reduce the $973.2 million request for the Milstar satellite system by $50.0 million due to anticipated budget reductions. The conferees note that the Department of Defense has reprogrammed large sums from this program in the last several years.

Mid-infrared advanced chemical laser (sec. 225)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 242) that would prohibit the Secretary of Defense from carrying out a test of the mid-infrared advanced chemical laser (MIRACL) transmitter and associated optics against an object in space during 1994 unless such testing is specifically authorized in law.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

Ballistic missile defenses (secs. 231-243)

The House bill contained 14 provisions (secs. 231-241 and 243-245) regarding ballistic missile defenses (BMD).

The Senate amendment contained 9 provisions (secs. 216 and 221-228).

The conferees address these various provisions under four general headings: Funding for BMD Programs; Policy Guidance; Programmatic Guidance; and Revisions to the 1991 Missile Defense Act.

FUNDING FOR BMD PROGRAMS

In section 231, the conferees recommend a total of $2,638,992,000 for research, development, test and evaluation for ballistic missile defense programs managed by the Ballistic Missile Defense Organization (BMDO). Of this amount, $1,450,992,000 is recommended for programs contained in the theater missile defenses program element, and $650,000,000 is recommended for the limited defense system program element. The conferees further agree to combine the program elements for "other follow-on systems" and "research and support," into a single program element, entitled "research and support," and to recommend $538,000,000 for this activity, including the SBIR/SBTT program.

The conferees further agree to provide limited transfer authority among these program elements, and to require the submission of the standard report on the allocation of funds among ballistic missile defense programs, projects, and activities within 60 days after the enactment of this act. None of the funds appropriated for use by the Ballistic Missile Defense Organization may be made available to the Brilliant Eyes program; funding for the Brilliant Pebbles (advanced interceptor technology) program may not exceed $35.0 million.

The conferees note that, in its recently completed Bottom-Up Review, the Administration has significantly reordered priorities for the ballistic missile defense program to emphasize protection of forward-deployed U.S. forces in the near-term and to proceed with a more robust theater missile defense program. The limited defense system program would be continued as an aggressive technology development program. The conferees are strongly committed to the top priority assigned to theater missile defense in the BMD program. The conferees are also highly supportive of a strong technology development program to reduce lead-times for deployment of a limited national missile defense system should a significant threat develop. The conferees further note that the level of funding authorized in this act is significantly lower than the annual average funding level for ballistic missile defenses recommended in the Bottom-Up Review. In part, this outcome represents the conferees' judgment that, for fiscal year 1994, other competing programs are of higher priority than additional BMD funding; in part, it reflects the conferees' judgment that the Department of Defense has not yet made the case for the funding levels it recommends in the Bottom-Up Review. Future program plans, timetables for deployment, testing plans, and missile defense architectures are incompletely defined, providing little basis, thus far, for congressional support of higher funding levels. Accordingly, the conferees require detailed reporting on the specific directions that the Administration intends to pursue in support of its broad BMD policy statements over the period covered by the future years defense program.

POLICY GUIDANCE

In section 234, the conferees require reports on the compliance of the current baseline configuration of several theater missile defense systems and components with the current interpretation of the ABM Treaty. The systems to be evaluated include the following:

- The Patriot multimode missile
- The extended range interceptor (ERINT)
- The theater ground-based radar
- The THAAD interceptor missile
- The Brilliant Eyes program

Planned upgrades to the AEGIS/SPY radar system and the SM-2 interceptor missile. The conferees also agree to limit the obligation of funds for each of the programs listed above to not more than 50 percent of the fiscal year 1994 funds allocated for that program to ensure that the information on compliance is available prior to the start of consideration of the fiscal year 1995 defense request.

In sections 235 and 236, respectively, the conferees require the Administration to provide detailed "roadmaps" of its multi-year plans for development and deployment of robust theater missile defenses, and its multi-year development plans for a limited defense system. The conferees are concerned that, within the theater missile defense initiative, duplicative and overlapping programs exist, and more programs are being considered for development and deployment than prospective future funding levels can support. The conferees agree that the threat is here today and that current defense capabilities need to be augmented by improved fielded capabilities, deployable in adequate numbers. Too often, the Department has allowed pursuit of some "better" longer term alternative to delay the development and fielding of quite good—and badly needed—nearer term capabilities. The conferees believe strongly that the Department must make the hard choices necessary to select those programs which will provide the most cost-effective theater missile defense capabilities within realistic overall budget ceilings. The conferees also encourage the completion of those critical near-term experiments and tests that would confirm the effectiveness of particular technologies for theater missile defense application. The conferees intend to scrutinize the BMDO theater missile defense plan closely to ensure the rapid availability of improved missile defenses to U.S. expeditionary forces.

The conferees are also concerned that the proposed annual funding in the Bottom-Up Review of $600 million per year for a limited defense system may be insufficiently focused on the development of the specific systems that could comprise a future initial Treaty-compliant development in response to some potential threat. The funding level may also be inadequate to ensure a robust hedge against the need for timely engineering and manufacturing development (EMD) and deployment to counter some future, belatedly-recognized threat to the United States. In this regard, the conferees direct that priority for funding within the limited defense system program shall be placed on those projects aimed at resolving the key system-level technical challenges associated with a limited defense system. The projects should include prototypical ground-based interceptors (GBI), kinetic kill vehicles (KKVs), ground-based radar and space-based sensor technology, and associated battle management/command, control and communications (BM/C3) capabilities necessary to support such a responsive posture. The conferees serve notice that funding requests for the continued technology development of components of a future limited defense system must clearly lead to reduced lead-times for deployment in response to a future threat. The funds cannot simply be expended across a broad array of "technology development" activities.

The conferees further note that, under the former "Strategic Defense Initiative (SDI)", substantial sums were invested in large test facilities, numerous projects and activities which may be of possible national defense utility but which may be unnecessary to the current emphasis on development and deployment of specific missile defense architectures, and countless studies, analyses, and contractor support activities, which should now be largely superfluous and unnecessary. In sum, BMDO has changed its name and has completed the broad outlines of a reorganization from SDI to deployable theater missile defenses. But many more programs, projects, and activities of limited relevance to near-term goals remain. Moreover, BMDO infrastructure and outside support cadres are still too robust for future funding levels. The BMDO needs to further streamline its overhead and slim down its programs, projects, and activities, in order to devote the bulk of its efforts to those missile defense development and deployment activities endorsed by Congress in this act.

In section 242, the conferees urge the Administration to establish meaningful cooperative development programs for the development of improved theater missile defense capabilities with our major allies. The proliferation of ballistic missiles and the anticipated increase in the range, sophistication, and lethality of those missiles and warheads means that most of our allies are now, or soon will be, threatened by potential ballistic missile attacks against their homelands, perhaps including attacks with weapons of mass destruction. Therefore, our major allies should have a common interest with the United States in the development of improved theater missile defenses, including the so-called "upper tier" defenses against longer-range theater missiles. Because the United States may be hard-pressed to fund adequately from available defense resources all of the worthwhile theater missile defense programs, the Administration needs to pursue diligently the establishment of cooperative programs in this area. The Administration should not merely seek allied financial contributions to ongoing BMDO programs, but shall establish a sharing of research tasks as well. Furthermore, it is in the interest of the United States and our allies to ensure that fielded theater missile defense capabilities are fully interoperable and complementary.

Section 243 would provide for the orderly transfer of far-term missile defense technologies from the management responsibility of BMDO to the military departments and defense agencies. While the Secretary of Defense may retain any of the programs, projects, and activities that he deems to be of overriding importance to the national security under BMDO management, the conferees strongly encourage this transfer. For the past two years, Congress has strongly recommended that follow-on research activities be transferred to the military departments and defense agencies. Only three such projects have been transferred. As a guideline, follow-on research projects should not be retained in, or transferred to, BMDO unless there is a plan to begin deployment-related activities, such as EMD, within the period covered by the future years defense program. Resources for ballistic missile defenses are limited, and the decision has been made to abandon a fixed date for deployment of national missile defenses and to keep limited defense systems at the technology demonstration level. These factors all suggest that "follow-on technologies" are highly unlikely to be developed for deployment in the foreseeable future. Other potential defense missions outside the BMD program for long-term technologies, such as high energy lasers, appear more promising, yet continuation of such programs under BMDO auspices unnecessarily focuses those technology efforts on missile defense missions. To the extent the Secretary elects to retain any of the follow-on systems technologies within BMDO, such activities shall be placed under, and funded from the resources allocated to, the research and support program element.

In section 237, the conferees incorporate separate provisions of the House bill (sec. 240) regarding theater missile defense testing and the Senate amendment (sec. 228) regarding testing of limited defense system components.

PROGRAMMATIC GUIDANCE

Both the House bill and the Senate amendment contained provisions that would offer programmatic direction and guidance on missile defense activities to BMDO.

In section 233, the conferees provide guidance regarding the current competition to provide improved Patriot PAC-3 capabilities. The conferees provide a mechanism to ensure that, in the event the scheduled February 28, 1994, downselect decision by BMDO is delayed, funding will be available to support both competitor teams until such a decision is taken. The conferees, however, urge BMDO to adhere to the current schedule for selection, and direct BMDO to notify the congressional defense committees promptly of any delay, and the reasons for such delay, in the scheduled downselect decision.

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 238) that would direct the Secretary of Defense to pursue a particular "upper tier" theater missile defense configuration. The conferees agree not to adopt the House provision; however, the Secretary is directed to include consideration of this particular configuration in the theater missile defense roadmap required by section 235. The Secretary is also directed to ensure the performance of the required critical tests and evaluations that will demonstrate the potential effectiveness of the several alternatives under consideration for lower tier and upper tier theater ballistic missile defenses.

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 244) related to the Clementine satellite program. The conferees do not believe the program is relevant to the near-term missile defense capabilities that will be emphasized. Accordingly, in section 241, the conferees direct the Secretary to evaluate the merits of the proposed use of the Clementine satellite program. If the Secretary determines that it merits DOD support, the Secretary shall apply funding to and assign programmatic responsibility to a military department of defense agency other than BMDO.

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 241) that would strongly endorse the joint U.S.-Israel ARROW cooperative program and would direct certain funding levels for the program. The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 216) that would require the Secretary to conduct a full review of the ARROW program. In section 238, the conferees reiterate their support for the ongoing ARROW program. At the same time, the conferees recognize the importance of careful review and accountability for funds provided and to be provided in support of the joint program. Accordingly, in section 239, the conferees require the Secretary to review the ARROW program and provide the results to the relevant congressional committees.

REVISION TO THE MISSILE DEFENSE ACT OF 1991

In section 232, the conferees make technical and conforming changes to the Missile Defense Act of 1991, as amended, to reflect the changed national missile defense priorities resulting from the Bottom-Up Review and the redesignation of SDIO as BMDO.

Defense women's health research (sec. 251)

The House bill included a provision (sec. 251) that would establish a Defense Women's Health Research Center to serve as the coordinating agent within the Department of Defense for multidisciplinary and multi-institutional research on women's health issues related to service in the armed forces.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment. The conferees agree that the Secretary of Defense may establish a women's health research center at an existing DOD medical center that is best able to carry out the coordinating agent role, both within DOD and with other agencies, including the Department of Health and Human Services, the Department of Veterans' Affairs, and the Indian Health Service. The center should focus its research efforts on matters relating to women's service in the military. It should also ensure that DOD medical centers stay up to date on other agencies' much larger health research efforts affecting women in the military and female dependents of servicemembers, particularly at the National Institutes for Health and the Centers for Disease Control. The center should ensure that women in the military and female dependents of servicemembers have the opportunity to participate in research studies on women's health issues funded both by the Department of Defense and other federal agencies. The conference agreement would authorize an additional $20.0 million of fiscal year 1994 defense research funds in PE 63002A for establishment of the center or for medical research relating to women's service in the military at existing DOD medical centers, should the Secretary choose not to establish the center.

The conferees agree that the purpose of this funding is to provide a coordinated effort for medical research within DOD on women's health issues relation to women's service in the military. The Department of Defense must spend this funding for that purpose under a single coordinating agent within DOD. If the Secretary chooses not to establish the center, the conferees agree that the Secretary should submit a report to the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and House of Representatives before May 1, 1994, reflecting the Department's plan for the use of the $20.0 million authorized in PE 63002A.

If the Secretary chooses to establish a women's health center, the Secretary shall report to the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and House of Representatives, 60 days before the establishment of the center, on the competitive process used to establish the center and the planned location of the center.

Inclusion of women and minorities in clinical research projects (sec. 252)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 253) that would ensure that women and minorities are included in future clinical research projects where appropriate.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provisions.

The Senate recedes.

Nuclear testing (sec. 261)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 231) that would prohibit the obligation of funds to support the "Mighty Uncle" test or any other test of the effects of nuclear weapons on military systems that is inconsistent with section 507 of the Energy and Water Development Appropriations Act for Fiscal Year 1993 (Public Law 102-377). The provision would allow the Defense Nuclear Agency to retain the funds if appropriated to do other work at the Nevada Test Site to maintain its testing competency.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with a technical amendment.

The provision would prohibit the obligation of funds for preparations for weapons effects tests, including "Mighty Uncle," that are inconsistent with section 507 of the Energy and Water Development Appropriations Act for Fiscal Year 1993. The provision would permit the Defense Nuclear Agency to proceed with tunnel deactivation, environmental cleanup, and other infrastructure activities at the Nevada Test Site associated with maintaining the capability to resume weapons effect testing in the future.

One-year delay in transfer of management responsibility for Navy mine countermeasures program (sec. 262)

The House included a provision (sec. 264) that would amend section 216 of the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Years 1992 and 1993 to change the years of implementation from fiscal years 1994 through 1997 to fiscal years 1995 through 1997.

The Senate amendment included a similar provision (sec. 232), except this provision would shift implementation to fiscal years 1995 through 1999.

The House recedes.

Semiconductor Technology Council (sec. 263)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 233) that would amend the statute authorizing federal support of Sematech to create a new advisory committee that would have a broader charter than the original advisory committee.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment that would ensure that a key purpose of the new committee would be to address the dynamic market forces that influence the direction and focus of public sector investment in semiconductor technology development, and expand industry representation on the committee.

Authority to acquire large cavitation channel, Memphis, Tennessee (sec. 264)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 234) that would authorize the Secretary of the Navy to acquire title to land on President's Island, Memphis, Tennessee, the site of the Navy large cavitation channel. The provision would make amounts authorized for the Navy pursuant to section 201(2) of the Senate amendment available for this purpose.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with a technical amendment.

Repeal of requirement for study by Office of Technology Assessment (sec. 266)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 261) that would repeal the requirement for a study by the Office of Technology Assessment.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

Comprehensive independent study of national cryptography policy (sec. 267)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 262) that would require a study by the National Research Council of the National Academy of Sciences on cryptographic technologies and national cryptography policy.

The Senate bill contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment that would require the study to examine two additional issues.

The conferees intend that the National Research Council study include the effects of cryptographic policy on U.S. law enforcement and national security interests, on the privacy interests of U.S. citizens, and on the commercial interests of U.S. industry. Due to the extensive civilian interest in the application of encryption and computer technology, the conferees strongly recommend that the National Research Council consult with and seek input from the relevant federal agencies, including, but not limited to, the National Institute for Standards and Technology of the Department of Commerce.

Review of assignment of defense research and development categories (sec. 268)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 263) that would direct the Secretary of Defense to: (1) review the Department's management and assignment of program element numerical categories to its research and development programs; (2) designate an official responsible for monitoring and reviewing such program element numerical categories; and (3) provide a report and certification to the congressional defense committees.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with a technical amendment that would include research categories 6.1 and 6.2 within the review.

Grant to support research on exposure to hazardous agents and materials by military personnel who served in the Persian Gulf war (sec. 270)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 267) that would make a $1.2 million grant for studying the possible health effects of exposure to low levels of volatile organic chemicals and other substances, especially among persons who served on active duty in the Southwest Asia theater of operations during the Persian Gulf war.

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 1076) that would acknowledge the possibility that U.S. military personnel who served in Southwest Asia during the Persian Gulf war may have been exposed to combined chemical warfare agents and other hazardous agents and substances. The provision would direct the Secretary of Defense to determine the validity and accuracy of claims that members of the armed forces who served in southwest Asia were exposed to combined chemical warfare agents, biological warfare agents, biological toxins, and other hazardous environmental conditions. The provision would authorize $2.0 million for the study. The provision also would direct the Secretary of the Army to enter into a contract with a hospital or other existing health care research facility for research into the effects of exposure to chemical, biological, radiological, and other hazardous agents and materials and would provide $2.0 million for this purpose.

The Senate recedes with an amendment. The conferees agree to authorize $1.2 million for the research described in the House provision.

The conferees are aware that the Department of Defense has maintained that there is no evidence that Iraqi forces used chemical or biological weapons or agents or that U.S. troops were accidentally exposed to such agents during the Persian Gulf war. The information the Department and U.S. intelligence agencies provided supports this position. The conferees are aware of reports by Czech Republic chemical defense units serving with coalition forces in the Gulf that they detected very small quantities of chemical agents on two separate occasions, but Czech military personnel were not exposed. The Department of Defense has acknowledged the Czech reports and stated that they cannot be discounted. The Department has also stated that the reported detections were not confirmed by U.S. or other allied units. The conferees are unaware of any other reports of chemical or biological weapons use during the Gulf war. Also, there are no substantiated reports in which the exposure of U.S. personnel to chemical warfare agents, biological agents, or biotoxins has been confirmed.

The conferees do not discount the claims by U.S. personnel who served in the Gulf that they are suffering a mystery ailment of unexplained origins, the so-called "Desert Storm syndrome." The conferees are also aware that the Department of Defense and the Department of Veterans Affairs are investigating the potential causes of Desert Storm syndrome.

The conferees do not treat the possible exposure to chemical or biological agents lightly. They believe, however, that the available evidence provides limited credence to the need for a separate $2.0 million study called for in the Senate amendment. The conferees are concerned that to focus at this time on the issue of unconfirmed chemical or biological exposure may adversely affect the ability to resolve what appears to be more proximate and plausible potential causes of Desert Storm syndrome for which evidence does exist (exposure to large and continuous quantities of petrochemicals, petrochemical vapors, or other hazardous chemicals, for example). For these reasons, the conferees agree to delete the Senate recommendation for a $2.0 million study to investigate the possible exposure to hazardous materials.

The conferees look forward to prompt reports by the Departments of Defense and Veterans affairs on their investigations into possible causes of Desert Storm syndrome.

Research on exposure to depleted uranium by military personnel who served in the Persian Gulf war (sec. 271)

The House bill contained $1.7 million in PE 603002A to initiate a five-year study on the pathology of depleted uranium fragments. The House report (H. Rept. 103-200) would direct the Secretary of the Army to fund the balance of the study in subsequent annual requests for medical research funding.

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 1076(e) and (j)(3)) that would direct the Secretary of the Army to study the effect upon humans of exposure to fragments of depleted uranium from weapons that have been fired. The provision would provide $1.7 million for this purpose.

The conferees agree to a provision that would direct the Secretary of Defense to make a competitive grant in the amount of $1.7 million to a medical research institution for the purpose of studying possible short- and long-term effects on the health of personnel who are exposed to depleted uranium on the battlefield, including exposure through ingestion, inhalation, or bodily injury.

Metal casting (sec. 272)

The House bill would authorize $15.0 million from within the Defense Logistics Agency's MANTECH program for a pilot manufacturing program for the metal casting industry.

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 236) that would urge the Secretary of Defense to provide funding, as a part of the defense conversion program, for development, technology transfer, and training within the metal casting industry.

The House recedes. The conferees note that significant awards have been made under the fiscal year 1993 defense conversion program to the metal casting industry. The conferees urge the Department of Defense to continue to seriously consider proposals from the metal casting industry in fiscal year 1994.

Reentry vehicle industrial base

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 203) that would authorize $5.0 million for the Navy contribution to the reentry vehicle industrial base study described in the House report (H. Rept. 103-200).

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes. The conferees agree that legislation is not required and direct that, of the amount authorized to be appropriated pursuant to section 201 of this act for the Navy, $5.0 million be available to implement the U.S. Strategic Command's recommendation to sustain the reentry vehicle industrial base.

Horizontal integration

The budget request did not include any funds for demonstrating digital electronics devices and their application to solving problems of command and control, battle management, and combat identification. This effort has been called "horizontal integration."

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 204) that would authorize $8.0 million to undertake horizontal integration and would authorize an additional $2.0 million to perform a requirements study of the need for upgrading the data processor on the M1A2 tank.

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 1075) that would authorize $24.0 million for the Army to demonstrate the horizontal integration of its primary combat units.

The conferees agree to delete both provisions.

The conferees strongly support the Army's efforts to electronically integrate its combat forces, but believe that the Army's plan to field this capability is too fainthearted. The Army's plan for fielding this capability in operational units will stretch well into the next century. During the time the Army will take to outfit an integrated corps of combat forces, the electronics industry will introduce at least two new generations of technology. Left alone, the Army will field obsolete electronics. The conferees believe this is unacceptable.

The conferees believe that the Army plan has the wrong focus. Too much of the Army's plan rests with the complete overhaul of a limited number of key systems, such as the AH-64 helicopter, the M-1 tank, and the M-2 fighting vehicle. The pace of modernization will be held back because the Army is using the "horizontal integration" plan as a rationale for block modernization of the underlying weapon systems. The conferees believe the Army should have a modernization program for fielded weapons. The Army, however, should not let the underlying program for upgrading major weapon systems hold back this horizontal integration revolution.

The Army represents that horizontal integration will include all combat and combat support elements. The conferees note, however, that concrete plans extend to only a handful of combat weapon systems, such as tanks, fighting vehicles, and helicopters.

The conferees believe that horizontal integration offers the key to avoiding fratricide by providing affirmative combat identification on the battlefield. The Army is proceeding quickly with a combat identification program, but has not shown how this effort is coordinated with the broader horizontal integration plan.

For these reasons, the conferees direct the Under Secretary of Defense for Acquisition and Technology to undertake a comprehensive reassessment of the horizontal integration initiative. In conjunction with the Army, the Under Secretary should develop a modernization plan with at least the following three goals: (1) to cut in half the time the Army intends to spend on fielding integrated systems; (2) to ensure that all maneuver and maneuver support elements in a division are incorporated in the integration master plan; and (3) to coordinate fully the horizontal integration master plan with the Department's plans for combat identification and fratricide avoidance.

The conferees agree to authorize $8.0 million for horizontal integration to continue ongoing testing. The conferees, however, agree that they will not authorize funds in future years until the Department completes the comprehensive assessment and submits the results of that assessment to the congressional defense committees.

High performance computer modernization program

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 214) that would require supercomputers acquired by the Department to modernize the capability of the defense laboratories to be of current vintage and reflect the needs of the users and not the needs of the developers of new supercomputers.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

The conferees understand that a balance must be struck between the purchase of traditional vector supercomputers and highly parallel supercomputers. On the one hand, many of the high performance computing needs of the Department's scientific and engineering community can be met by supercomputers with proven state of the art algorithms, computer programs, and other diagnostic architectures. On the other hand, it is important to infuse new computing system architectures as rapidly as possible into the Defense Department organizations that rely on modern high performance computers, in order to take advantage of improved computing power, lower cost, and compatibility with advanced systems coming into use in industry. Therefore, the conferees direct the Director, Defense Research and Engineering (DDR&E) to ensure a balance in computer capability, both in technologies and integration into both research and operational centers within the Department of Defense; update the high performance computer modernization plan; and submit it to the congressional defense committees by March 31, 1994. The conferees also direct that, where practical, the Department consider using the high performance computing capability in non-DOD supercomputing centers to take advantage of potential cost savings and a wide range of available computer architectures. Finally, the conferees direct the Secretary of Defense to include the military service academies as participants in the program and expect their needs to be considered in future plan updates.

The conferees agree to authorize the $122.819 million contained in the budget request for high performance computer modernization. They also transfer these funds from RDT&E to procurement. The conferees direct that these funds may also be available for communications and network services and the operation of high performance computers. The conferees also recommend that either a broad agency announcement or a request for proposal be used to execute individual elements of this program, at the discretion of the Secretary of Defense.

DP-2 vectored thrust technology demonstration project

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 219) that would specify that $15.0 million of research and development funds appropriated for fiscal year 1993 shall be obligated and expended only for testing of the DP-2 vectored thrust technology demonstration project.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes. The conferees note that the statement of managers accompanying the Department of Defense Appropriations Act for Fiscal Year 1993 (H. Rept. 102-1015) specified that, of the funds provided in the tactical technology line for the Advanced Research Projects Agency, not more than $15.0 million would be available only for the DP-2 vectored thrust technology demonstration project. The conferees also note that in the past the U.S. Special Operations Command has supported investigation of this technology and its potential for meeting the Command's "mid-lift" requirement. The conferees encourage the Department of Defense to seriously consider this technology.

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 252) that would authorize the continuation of the Army breast cancer program.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

Report on research relating to female members of the uniformed services and female covered beneficiaries

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 254) that would require the Department of Defense to report on women's health research.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

Lyme disease program

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 268) that would direct the Secretary of Defense to carry out a program for the prevention, detection, and treatment of Lyme disease.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes. The conferees agree that statutory language is not required. The conferees, however, direct the Secretary of Defense to conduct a program relating to the prevention, detection, and treatment of Lyme disease through the Environmental Hygiene Agency of the Department of the Army. Information derived from the program that is applicable to the general public shall be provided to the Secretary of Health and Human Services for dissemination to appropriate public health authorities through the Public Health Service.

Funding of $1.0 million for the program shall be derived from the funds available to the Department of the Army in section 201 of this act. The sum of $500,000 shall be for one-time start-up costs for equipment, facilities, and software development and $500,000 shall be for labor and operating expenses.

Joint primary aircraft training system

The budget request contained $36.8 million for development of specialized undergraduate pilot training. This amount included the joint primary aircraft training system (JPATS) and additional development related to the T-1A multi-engine trainer and the enhanced flight screening (EFS) aircraft.

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 125) that would prohibit the obligation of any funds appropriated for a joint primary aircraft trainer until the Secretary of Defense certified that the system was designed for safe and effective operation by at least 95 percent of both male and female pilot trainees. The Senate amendment would also limit JPATS funding to $1.6 million because of delays in the program.

The House bill contained no similar provision and would approve the funding request.

The Senate recedes. The conferees agree to defer a decision on the minimum percentages of males and females which JPATS must encompass. The conferees direct the Department not to take any action that would limit the choices of how large a percentage of the male and female population are to be accommodated by JPATS until the Secretary of Defense conducts a study to determine the following:

(1) What is the appropriate population of males and females to us in calculating such percentages?

(2) What percentages of male and female pilot candidates are supported by current training systems (both Navy and Air Force)?

(3) What percentages are supported by the current JPATS designs?

(4) What is the largest change in the physical arrangement of the cockpits that can be incorporated into JPATS competitors without departing from a non-developmental acquisition structure?

(5) What are the maximum population percentages that such a non-developmental JPATS program would support?

(6) What are the life cycle cost implications of departing from a non-developmental program?

(7) What are the life cycle costs of fielding JPATS if the non-developmental acquisition plan is abandoned, to include alternative levels of population coverage above that achievable in a non-developmental JPATS program?

(8) What are the safety considerations in expanding population percentages within the framework of a nondevelopment JPATS program, or in expanding population percentages beyond that point?

The conferees reserve judgment on the JPATS program. The conferees agree that the Department should not make a premature decision on JPATS acquisition that does not balance nondevelopmental cost savings with the most expanded user population possible. Therefore, the conferees direct the Secretary of Defense to report the results of this analysis to the congressional defense committees no later than March 1, 1994.

The conferees believe that it does little good to expand the candidate population for a primary jet trainer, when follow-on training and fleet aircraft cannot safely accommodate the new population. The conferees are concerned about the larger issue of the expansion of universal ejection seat capability. Accordingly, the conferees direct the Secretary of Defense to separately analyze the possible expansion of parameters on ejection seats both currently in use by all U.S. military aircraft and under development for future aircraft. The conferees direct the Secretary to submit the results of this analysis to the congressional defense committees in conjunction with the results of the JPATS study by March 1, 1994.

The conferees agree to provide $5.6 million for specialized undergraduate pilot training ($2.4 million as requested for T-1A and EFS, and $3.2 million for JPATS).

Javelin missile program

The Senate amendment included a provision (sec. 212) that would limit the obligation of research and development funds for the Javelin missile program in fiscal year 1994 to $34.9 million until the Under Secretary of Defense reviewed the program and certified that its cost problems were under control, conducted a cost-effectiveness analysis, and approved any producibility plan the Army provided.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The conferees share the Senate report's concerns (S. Rept. 103-112) about the contractor's cost growth problems. The conferees also understand that the Army is contemplating major reductions in Javelin missile procurement quantities which would further increase unit costs. The conferees expect the Army to reassess the Javelin's cost-effectiveness in view of continually escalating costs. The conferees also expect the Army to ensure that system development and production costs are brought under control.

Last year, Congress provided the Army with an additional $10.0 million to facilitate changes in system design to lower production costs. The Army, however, used these funds to finance cost overruns. The conferees expect the Army to provide the congressional defense committees with an enhanced producibility plan approved by the Army and the contractors when it submits the fiscal year 1995 budget. The conferees expect this report to describe how the Army intends to achieve the cost reductions described in the producibility plan that was presented to Congress last year.

The conferees understand that the Javelin missile system continues to perform well in development tests and understands the Army's strong support for the system. However, the Army and the contractors must understand that they cannot ignore continuing cost growth that is eroding congressional support for the Javelin.

B-1 electronic countermeasures test plan

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 213) that would require the development of a test plan for any new B-1B electronic countermeasures system which the Air Force proposes to acquire as a replacement for the failed ALQ-161 system.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

Interim reconnaissance program

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 237) that would permit the unmanned aerial vehicle joint program office (JPO) to obligate up to $40.0 million for a long-endurance, unmanned aerial vehicle program to procure, integrate, test and evaluate non-developmental airframes, sensors, communications equipment, mission planning equipment and ground stations.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes. The conferees agree to provide funding for a long-endurance, unmanned aerial vehicle program with the restructured tactical reconnaissance office described elsewhere in this statement of managers.

Medical laser burn treatment

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 1089) that would direct the Secretary of Defense to carry out a program for medical laser burn treatment.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes. The conferees agree that statutory language is not required. The conferees, however, direct the Secretary of Defense to continue the medical laser burn treatment program. Information derived from the program that is applicable to the general public shall be provided to the Secretary of Health and Human Services for dissemination to appropriate public health authorities through the Public Health Service.

Funding of $2.0 million for the program shall be derived from the funds available to the Department of the Army in section 201 of this act.

TITLE III—OPERATION AND MAINTENANCE

The House bill would authorize $89,055,704,000 for operation and maintenance for the Department of Defense and $1,405,895,000 for Working Capital Fund accounts in fiscal year 1993.

The Senate amendment would authorize $86,213,277,000 for operation and maintenance for the Department of Defense and $3,921,495,000 for Working Capital Fund accounts in fiscal year 1993.

The conferees recommended authorization of $87,404,184,000 for operation and maintenance for the Department of Defense and $1,498,195,000 for Working Capital Fund accounts in fiscal year 1993, as reflected in the following tables.

The conferees recommended authorization of all funds for the Defense Health Program, including procurement, under title III. The conferees recommended authorization of all funds for the Chemical Demilitarization Program under Title I.

ITEMS OF SPECIAL INTEREST

Reprogramming to meet training and readiness requirements

The conferees reluctantly made reductions of approximately $2.0 billion to the budget request for the operations and maintenance (O&M) accounts in order to meet the Budget Resolution's outlay target. This level of reductions brings the authorization for O&M funding in the conference agreement below the levels of both the House bill and the Senate amendment. The conferees encourage the Secretary of Defense to reprogram funds from other areas of the DOD budget to the O&M accounts if these reductions affect training or readiness in the military services.

Test program for Reserve professional military education

The National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1993 required the Secretary of the Army to submit a plan for carrying out a test program to improve professional military education (PME) for reserve component officers of the Army. The conferees are very pleased with the reserve PME test plan the Secretary of the Army submitted and have authorized $1.2 million to implement this plan.

Morale, welfare, and recreation programs at Great Lakes Naval Training Center, Illinois

The Senate report (S. Rept. 103-112) directed the Navy to prepare a plan for the utilization of morale, welfare, and recreation facilities to support Great Lakes Naval Training Center, Illinois.

The House report (H. Rept. 103-200) contained no similar directive.

The conferees share concerns similar to those expressed in the Senate report for military families and personnel. The conferees concur with the request that the Navy devise a plan to address the needs of these personnel.

Portability of benefits for nonappropriated fund employees

The Senate report (S. Rept. 103-112) directed the Secretary of Defense to report on the Department of Defense plans to extend the portability of benefits for nonappropriated fund employees.

The House report (H. Rept. 103-200) contained no similar directive.

The conferees share the concerns expressed in the Senate report about these affected employees. Additionally, the conferees concur that the portability legislation should be expanded to include employees who transfer between other executive branch agencies and branches of government, especially in cases where duties are comparable to those performed in their status as nonappropriated fund employees. Further, the conferees agree that disparities in health programs for nonappropriated fund employees should be reviewed. The conferees concur with the date and purpose of the report, and request that it be submitted to the Armed Services Committees of the Senate and House of Representatives.

Joint commissary and exchange demonstration program

The Senate report (S. Rept. 103-112) directed the Department of Defense to conduct demonstration programs similar to the joint commissary and exchange demonstration program at Carswell Air Force Base, Texas.

The House report contained no similar directive.

The conferees agree that the demonstration programs are an important attempt to meet the needs of the active duty, retired, and reserve community. The conferees also agree not to designate demonstration program sites, and direct the Secretary of Defense to nominate two demonstration sites by April 15, 1994, in addition to the three sites allowed in the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1993 (Public Law 102-484).

LEGISLATIVE PROVISIONS

LEGISLATIVE PROVISIONS ADOPTED

Armed forces retirement homes (sec. 303)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 303) that would authorize $61.9 million for the operation of the Armed Forces Retirement Homes in fiscal year 1994.

The Senate amendment contained a similar provision (sec. 304).

The House recedes.

National security education trust fund obligations (sec. 304)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 305) that would authorize $24.0 million to be obligated from the National Security Education Trust Fund in fiscal year 1994.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

Transfer from the National Defense Stockpile Transaction Fund (sec. 305)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 304) that would authorize the Secretary of Defense to transfer not more than $500.0 million from the National Defense Stockpile Transaction Fund to the operation and maintenance (O&M) accounts during fiscal year 1994.

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 306) that would authorize the Secretary of Defense to transfer $3,055.0 million from the Defense Business Operations Fund (DBOF) and $500.0 million from the National Defense Stockpile Transaction Fund to the O&M accounts during fiscal year 1994.

The House recedes with an amendment that would authorize the Secretary of Defense to transfer $500.0 million from the National Defense Stockpile Transaction Fund to the O&M accounts during fiscal year 1994. The conferees agree not to authorize the transfer of any funds from the Defense Business Operations Fund to the O&M accounts during fiscal year 1994.

Funds for clearing landmines (sec. 306)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 307) that would authorize not more than $10.0 million for activities to support the clearing of landmines for humanitarian purposes.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment that would require the Secretary of Defense to submit a report to the congressional defense committees on the Secretary's plans for using the authority provided by the provision.

Prohibition on operation of the Naval Air Station, Bermuda (sec. 311)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 313) that would prohibit the Secretary of Defense from providing any funds for the operation and maintenance of the Naval Air Station, Bermuda, effective 90 days after enactment of this act.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment that would terminate DOD funding to operate the Naval Air Station, Bermuda, after September 1, 1995. Under this provision, not later than March 1, 1994, the Secretary of Defense shall submit a report to the Congress with a plan to terminate the operation of the Naval Air Station. After September 1, 1995, the Secretary of Defense may provide support for airfield operations at the Naval Air Station only on a reimbursable basis. The conferees believe that this provision will allow the withdrawal of the Navy from the Naval Air Station in an orderly manner, consistent with our long-standing relationship with a valuable ally.

Limitation on the use of appropriated funds for Department of Defense golf courses (sec. 312)

The House bill included a provision (sec. 314) that would limit the use of appropriated funds for Department of Defense golf courses.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

Prohibition on the use of certain cost comparison studies (sec. 313)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 315) that would prohibit the Secretary of Defense from entering into a contract for the performance of a commercial activity in any case in which the contract results from a cost comparison study conducted under OMB-Circular A-76.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment that would prohibit the Secretary of Defense from entering into a contract prior to April 1, 1994, for the performance of a commercial activity in any case in which the contract results from a cost comparison study conducted under OMB-Circular A-76.

Limitation on contracts with certain ship repair companies for ship repair (sec. 314)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 320) that would prohibit the Secretary of Defense from entering into a contract with the Bahrain Ship Repairing and Engineering Company for the overhaul, repair, or maintenance of naval vessels until the Secretary certified that at least one of three conditions existed.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment that would: (1) change the Secretary of Defense to the Secretary of the Navy; (2) limit the prohibition to contracts in excess of $250,000; (3) clarify that one of the conditions refers to voyage repairs; and (4) describe the ship repair company in general terms.

Requirement of performance in the United States of certain reflagging or repair work (sec. 315)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 321) that would prohibit the Secretary of Defense from entering into a time charter agreement for the use of certain foreign flag vessels. The provision would preclude the Secretary from chartering a vessel that had been reflagged or repaired in a foreign shipyard within the period beginning two years prior to the date of any such agreement.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment that would require that reflagging and repair work done for vessels being offered for time charter, in response to a request for proposals, be performed in the United States. The amendment also would allow the Secretary of Defense to waive this requirement if the Secretary determines that such action would be critical for national security.

Prohibition on joint use of Selfridge Air National Guard Base, Michigan, with civil aviation (sec. 316)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 323) that would prohibit the Secretary of the Air Force from entering into any agreements that would provide or permit civil aircraft to regularly use Selfridge Air National Guard Base, Michigan.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

Location of certain prepositioning facilities (sec. 317)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 316) that would direct the Secretary of the Army to establish the Army prepositioning maintenance facility at Charleston, South Carolina. The provision also would require the Marine Corps to keep its prepositioning facility at Blount Island, Florida for the next two years. Finally, the provision would require the Secretary of Defense to submit a cost and operational analysis justifying any decision to relocate the Marine Corps facility before undertaking such relocation.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

Extension of authority for use of the Defense Business Operations Fund (sec. 331)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 331) that would preclude the Secretary of Defense from operating the Defense Business Operations Fund (DBOF) after April 15, 1994.

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 311) that would amend section 316 of the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Years 1992 and 1993 to authorize the Secretary of Defense to manage the working capital funds and industrial, commercial, and support activities of DOD through the DBOF through December 31, 1994.

The House recedes. The conferees note that, under the conference agreement, the Secretary of Defense is precluded from adding new programs or activities to the DBOF.

The conferees remain concerned about the significant and continuing problems in the implementation of the DBOF. The conferees expect the senior leadership of the Department of Defense to move vigorously and aggressively to address these problems in the coming months.

The conferees have denied the proposed transfer of $3.1 billion from the DBOF to the operation and maintenance accounts included in the fiscal year 1994 budget request, and have authorized $3.1 billion in new budget authority in place of the transfer. To the extent that the cash balance in the DBOF exceeds the operating requirements of the Fund during fiscal year 1994, these funds should be transferred to address shortfalls in training and readiness programs; unfinanced requirements such as the fiscal year 1994 locality pay raise for federal civilian employees; and the reversal of the current DBOF advance billing procedures. The conferees note that the transfer of cash balances out of the DBOF can only be accomplished through reprogramming procedures, unless otherwise provided by law.

Implementation of the Defense Business Operations Fund (sec. 332)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 333) that would require the Secretary of Defense to replace the Defense Business Operations Fund (DBOF) with a Competitive Business Operations Fund and a Regulated Business Operations Fund.

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 312) that would revise the DBOF implementation milestones contained in section 341 of the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1993. The provision would require the Secretary of Defense to present to the congressional defense committees, not later than 30 days after the enactment of this act, a comprehensive management plan for the DBOF that identifies the actions the Department will take to improve its implementation and operation. In addition, the provision would require the Secretary of Defense to submit a report to the congressional defense committees on the Department's progress in implementing the comprehensive management plan not later than February 1, 1994. This report should describe the progress made in reaching the milestones established in the plan, and explain the failure to meet any of the milestones. Section 312 also would require the Comptroller General of the United States to monitor and evaluate the progress of the Department of Defense in developing and implementing the comprehensive management plan for the DBOF. The Comptroller General would be required to submit a report to the congressional defense committees not later than March 1, 1994, containing: (1) the findings and conclusions of the Comptroller General pursuant to the monitoring and evaluation of the DOD comprehensive management plan for the DBOF; (2) an evaluation of the March 1, 1994 progress report of the Secretary of Defense; and (3) any recommendations for legislative or administrative actions that the Comptroller General considers appropriate.

The House recedes with an amendment. The conferees intend to exercise close oversight of the Department's efforts to improve the DBOF in the coming months. The conferees further request the Comptroller General to carry out reviews of two specific areas of the DBOF, and report the results of these reviews to the congressional defense committees by May 15, 1994.

The first area is the rate-setting process within the business activities included in the DBOF. All businesses in the DBOF are required to set their prices based on the full recovery of costs. The conferees request the General Accounting Office (GAO) to review the rate-setting process within DBOF to determine if the rates for the various business areas are in fact based on the full recovery of costs, and to make recommendations to address any deficiencies found in the current rate-setting process.

The second area is the execution of projects funded through the DBOF capital budget. Currently, investments in equipment, software, minor construction, and other management improvements costing more than $15,000 are funded through the DBOF capital budget. The conferees request the GAO to review the execution of the projects funded through the capital budget to date. This review should include a comparison of the justification of capital projects presented to Congress and the actual execution of these projects.

The conferees are also concerned with the level and nature of prior year losses that occur within certain DBOF business activities, particularly the causes of these losses and their impact on the establishment of rates.

Beginning with the fiscal year 1995 budget request, the Secretary of Defense should include in the annual DBOF budget documents a clear explanation of the variance between the business plan and actual operating results for each business activity within the DBOF that experiences a gain or loss during the previous fiscal year. This explanation should include the cause of the gain or loss; remedies taken to address the gain or loss; and actions taken to avoid a similar gain or loss in the future. In each business activity where there is a gain or loss, the Secretary of Defense should indicate the extent to which the gain or loss will be offset by the adjustment of the rates for that business activity in the coming fiscal year. The DBOF budget documents should also include a separate exhibit of business activities experiencing significant gains or losses which will have a major impact on rates or operations in subsequent years.

The conferees reiterate to the Department that the DBOF budget documents must be submitted to Congress in a timely manner as soon as possible after submission of the President's budget request, but in any case not later than March 15 of each year.

Charges for goods and services provided through the Defense Business Operations Fund (sec. 333)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 332) that would establish a rate-setting board to review the rates established for goods and services provided through the various business activities of the Defense Business Operations Fund (DBOF).

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with a clarifying amendment.

Contracts to perform workloads previously performed by depot-level activities of the Department of Defense (sec. 346)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 335) that would modify section 2469 of title 10, United States Code, as enacted by section 353 of the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1993 (Public Law 102-484), to clarify that neither the Secretary of Defense nor the secretary of a military department may change the performance of a depot-level maintenance workload, that has a value of $3.0 million or more and that is being performed by a Department of Defense depot-level activity, to performance by a private contractor unless, prior to selection of the private contractor, the Secretary uses competitive procedures for the selection.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes. The conferees concur with the Senate report's (S. Rept. 103-112) direction that the Secretary of Defense should, to the maximum extent possible, compete the depot maintenance workload from those depots that are closing among the remaining DOD depots in order to reduce costs and improve the overall efficiency of DOD depot operations. Such competition between depots should not impede the schedule for closing depots under the base closure process.

The Senate recedes with an amendment that would expand the House provision to include employees who received similar bonus awards at other naval aviation depots. The amendment also would require the Secretary of the Navy to submit a report to the congressional defense committees not later than March 1, 1994, describing how these employees were given bonus payments under their respective productivity gainsharing programs that were subsequently determined to be in excess of the amounts to which they were entitled; the number of employees receiving such excess payments and the total amount of excess payments; and any corrective actions taken to prevent the recurrence of this problem in the future.

The conferees fully support the continued existence and operation of the National Security Education Trust Fund. The conferees do not agree that the Trust Fund principal should be reduced. The conferees note that the Administration has assigned the Secretary of Defense management of this program who, in turn, has delegated responsibility to the Under Secretary of Defense for Policy. This action was taken in recognition of the fact that this program serves a wide variety of national security needs and not just intelligence. The Office of Management and Budget also has scored this program as a defense function. The Secretary of Defense has expressed strong support for the program.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment. The conferees agree to require the Secretary of the Army to submit the report not later than March 1, 1994. The conferees also agree not to restrict the use of any funds to operate or maintain the Marcus Hook Army facility pending completion of this report.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

Limitation on use of funds for Trident submarine force

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 318) that would reduce the amount requested for operation and support of the Trident submarine program by $100 million.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

Expansion and clarification of commissary and exchange benefits

The House bill included a provision (sec. 351) concerning the expansion and clarification of commissary and exchange benefits.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

Required payment date under Prompt Payment Act for procurement of baked goods

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 367) that would require prompt payment for procurement of baked goods in the Department of Defense.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

The conferees note that the Prompt Payment Act (31 U.S.C. 3901, et seq.) establishes the policy that timely performance of a government contract in accordance with its terms and conditions entitles the contractor to timely payment. Payment terms specified in government contracts, including those of the Department of Defense, are expected to reflect the payment terms prevailing in the commercial marketplace.

The conferees direct the Director of the Defense Commissary Agency (DeCA) to determine the prevailing commercial payment terms for bakery products purchased by the DeCA pursuant to 10 U.S.C. 2486(b)(6). The conferees direct the Director to consult with the American Bakers Association and other appropriate trade associations representing producers and vendors of bakery products with respect to the design and content of the survey.

Based upon the survey results, the DeCA Director shall prepare a report which includes: (a) the survey results; (b) the survey methodology, including a copy of the survey instrument; and (c) a determination of the prevailing commercial payment terms for bakery products or an explanation why such a determination cannot be made. The report shall be furnished to the Committees on Armed Services and Governmental Affairs of the Senate and the Committees on Armed Services and Government Operations of the House of Representatives by May 1, 1994.

The conferees expect the DeCA to adopt the commercial payment terms as its contractual payment terms for bakery products as soon as practicable after June 30, 1994, but not later than October 1, 1994, unless the DeCA Director finds, as a result of the survey, that there is no prevailing payment terms for bakery products.

To maintain uniform implementation of the Prompt Payment Act on a government-wide basis, the conferees urge the Secretary of Defense to propose to the Director of the Office of Management and Budget an appropriate amendment to OMB Circular A-125 (Prompt Payment) and initiate a regulatory action to effect a corresponding amendment to the government-wide Federal Acquisition Regulation.

Provision of facilities and services of the Department of Defense to certain education entities

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 368) that would authorize the Secretary of Defense to make DOD facilities and the services of members of the armed forces and DOD civilian employees available to four educational entities on a reimbursable or non-reimbursable basis.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes. The conferees urge the military services and local unit commanders to work with educational entities, like those mentioned in the House provision, to further the entities' goals where such assistance does not detract from the overall performance of the unit's military mission. These efforts should be carried out under Department of Defense Directive 5410.18, entitled "Community Relations", as well as under the appropriate implementing directives of the military departments.

Exclusive use of aircraft carrier for full-time training

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 372) that would express the sense of Congress that the Navy's aviation training requirements can be adequately achieved in a safe and cost-effective manner only if an aircraft carrier is used exclusively and on a full-time basis to meet such requirements. This provision would also require the Secretary of the Navy to use the U.S.S. Forrestal or another aircraft carrier exclusively and on a full-time basis to meet the aviation training requirements of the Navy.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes. The conferees understand that the Department of Defense has decided to designate the U.S.S. John F. Kennedy as a reserve/training carrier. The conferees endorse the Navy's strong concern that the Navy's aviation training requirements should be carried out in a safe and cost-effective manner. The conferees recognize the value in operating the carrier designated to perform the aviation training mission in an established homeport where this training has been conducted for more than three decades. The Naval Air Station, Pensacola, is the historical birthplace of Naval aviation and has a long-established training mission. Therefore, the conferees recommend that the aviation training facilities located at the Naval Air Station utilized to the maximum extent possible. The conferees urge the Secretary of the Navy to consider stationing the U.S.S. John F. Kennedy at the Naval Air Station, Pensacola upon its return to service from its present overhaul.

Report on educational arrangements for children residing on military installations in the United States

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 373) that would require the Secretary of Defense to submit to Congress a report on educational arrangements the Secretary of Defense has made for children residing on military installations in the United States. The report would contain the Secretary's assessment and recommendations regarding the justification of the continuing need for section 6 school facilities. The report also would review the adequacy of Department of Education Impact Aid funding for military-impacted school districts.

The House report (H. Rept. 103-200) also directed the Secretary of Defense to report on several issues concerning the education of military dependents by the Department of Defense, and directed the General Accounting Office to review the Department of Defense Dependents School System.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes. The conferees agree not to require the Secretary of Defense to report on this area. However, the conferees direct the General Accounting Office to review the arrangements for educating Department of Defense military dependents, as outlined in the House report. Until this review is completed, the conferees are not prepared to make any changes in the current arrangements for educating military dependents.

Funding national defense strategic lift requirements

The National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1993 created the National Defense Sealift Fund. The Department of Defense had requested this initiative to help it manage the trade-offs it will face as the recommendations of the mobility requirements study (MRS) are implemented. The Senate amendment included a provision (sec. 303) that would consolidate funding and management of strategic airlift and strategic sealift in a strategic lift fund. The Senate report (S. Rept. 103-120) stated that having these funds in one account would permit the Department to choose more easily among the lift improvement options, including buying or modifying aircraft (for example, C-17s, commercial freighter aircraft, and C-141 service life extensions), or accelerating the timetable for meeting sealift requirements.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

The conferees agree that a decision to change the strategic sealift and airlift programs' management structure should not be made at this time. The conferees believe that the Department should have more time to make additional improvements in executing both programs.

Repeal of an exception to a limitation on the performance of depot-level maintenance of materiel

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 331) that would delete the requirement, in section 2466 of title 10, United States Code, that specific percentages of the Army's aviation depot-level workload be performed by DOD employees during fiscal years 1993-1995.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

Purchase of items not exceeding $100,000

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 333) that would authorize the Secretary of Defense to increase the threshold on purchase made with operation and maintenance funds from $15,000 to $100,000.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

TITLE IV—MILITARY PERSONNEL AUTHORIZATIONS

LEGISLATIVE PROVISIONS

End strengths for active forces (secs. 401, 403, and 404)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 401) that would authorize the active duty end strengths for each of the military services in the budget request.

The Senate amendment contained a similar provision (sec. 401) except for the active duty end strengths authorized for the Marine Corps and Air Force, and the separate authorization of officer strength levels.

The House recedes with an amendment.

The amendment would: (1) adopt the Senate provision's strength levels for the Marine Corps and the House provision's levels for the Air Force; (2) provide that the active duty strength of the Army may not be reduced below 555,000 before April 30, 1994, and thereafter only if the Secretary of Defense submits a report on the Bottom-Up Review and the President certifies to the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and House of Representatives the adequacy of Army forces to carry out the missions assigned to them under the Bottom-Up Review scenario and, at the same time, fulfill assigned peacekeeping and humanitarian missions; (3) provide that the active duty strength of the Army may not be reduced below 540,000 in fiscal year 1994; and (4) require the Secretary of Defense to submit a report on the personnel management actions programmed to be carried out in order to reach the military force strength levels assumed as of the end of fiscal year 1999 in the Bottom-Up Review for all the services.

The conferees are concerned about the future end strength of the Army and the Army's ability to support the spectrum of contingency operations upon which the Bottom-Up Review was premised. The Defense Department has not made public the number of active duty personnel who will eventually make up the post-Cold War Army. In the absence of that and related information, the conferees are not convinced that the end strength of the Army can be reduced below the levels authorized for fiscal year 1994 if the Army is to continue its various peacekeeping missions and maintain its capability to respond to two major regional contingencies nearly simultaneously. The conferees expect the Department of Defense to address this matter analytically to ensure that the Army can successfully execute the missions assigned to it under the Bottom-Up Review scenario as well as its peacekeeping and humanitarian missions.

The conferees expect the Department of Defense to maintain an active duty end strength for the Marine Corps in fiscal year 1994 of 177,000 as authorized. This level is consistent with Marine Corps force structure analysis and testimony provided to the Committee on Armed Services of the Senate and House of Representatives which indicate that this is the appropriate level for the Marine Corps to sustain its operational commitments without placing undue strain on Marine Corps personnel and their families.

The conferees expect the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and House of Representatives to carefully review subsequent authorization requests and future year defense programs of the military services to ensure that active and reserve forces and strength levels adequately support all of the missions assigned to them under the Bottom-Up Review plan. In this regard, the Department of Defense should be prepared to present detailed justification in hearings next year for the forces and strength levels that it recommends. The conferees would be reluctant to approve further reductions in the absence of such justification.

The following table summarizes the conference agreement with respect to active duty end strengths:

ACTIVE DUTY END STRENGTHS

(By fiscal year)

Temporary variation of end strength limitations for Marine Corps majors and lieutenant colonels (sec. 402)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 402) that would authorize the Secretary of the Navy to allow the Marine Corps to exceed the grade ceilings prescribed for its major and lieutenant colonel grades by section 523 of title 10, United States Code.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment that would provide the revised grade limitations shown below for fiscal years 1994 and 1995.

Fiscal year:	Major	Lieutenant colonel
1994	3,023	1,578
1995	3,157	1,634

The revised limits would accommodate a plan the Marine Corps prepared to have sufficient numbers of officers in the major and lieutenant colonel grades to satisfy joint and external assignment demands, and joint professional military education requirements, consistent with the intent of the Goldwater-Nichols Defense Reorganization Act of 1986 and the Defense Acquisition Workforce Improvement Act of 1990.

The conferees expect that the Department of Defense will address the adequacy of the existing grade tables as part of the report on officer personnel management systems required by section 502 of the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1993. The conferees intend to consider permanent adjustments to the grade tables after the report has been received.

On a related matter, the Senate conferees were recently approached by the Marine Corps and the Navy concerning the difficulties they have experienced in providing officers to fill general and flag officer joint staff positions because of the grade ceilings on the number of general and flag officers they are authorized to have on active duty. The Senate conferees would consider providing relief in this area if the Marine Corps and the Navy can analytically define the problem and recommend a responsible solution. In this regard, the Senate conferees expect the Assistant Secretary of the Navy for Manpower and Reserve Affairs, in consultation with the Assistant Secretary of Defense for Personnel and Readiness, to provide to the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and House of Representatives an analysis of this matter along with appropriate recommendations.

End strengths for Selected Reserve (sec. 411)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 411) that would authorize the end strengths for the Selected Reserve for each of the military services contained in the budget request.

The Senate amendment contained a similar provision (sec. 411) except for the end strengths that would be authorized for the Marine Corps Reserve, the Naval Reserve, the Coast Guard Reserve, and the Air National Guard.

The House recedes with an amendment. The amendment would authorize end strengths for the Selected Reserve as shown in the following table:

	1993 authorization	1994 request	1994 recommendation
Army National Guard	422,725	410,000	410,000
Army Reserve	279,615	260,000	260,000

(By fiscal year)

	1993 authorization	1994 request	1994 recommendation
Naval Reserve	133,675	113,400	118,000
Marine Corps Reserve	42,315	36,900	42,200
Air National Guard	119,300	117,700	117,700
Air Force Reserve	82,300	81,500	81,500
Coast Guard Reserve	15,150	8,000	10,000
Total	1,095,080	1,027,500	1,039,400

End strengths for reserves on active duty in support of the reserves (sec. 412)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 412) that would authorize the full-time active duty end strengths for each of the reserve components contained in the budget request.

The Senate amendment contained a similar provision (sec. 412) except for the Marine Corps Reserve, the Naval Reserve, and the Air National Guard.

TITLE V—MILITARY PERSONNEL POLICY LEGISLATIVE PROVISIONS

LEGISLATIVE PROVISIONS ADOPTED

Years of service for eligibility for separation pay for regular officers involuntarily discharged (sec. 501)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 501) that would amend section 1174 of title 10, United States Code, to require a minimum of six years of service for entitlement to separation pay for all regular officers upon selection for involuntary discharge.

The Senate amendment contained a similar provision (sec. 632).

The Senate recedes.

Expansion of eligibility for voluntary separation incentive and special separation benefits programs (sec. 502)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 502) that would expand eligibility for the voluntary separation incentive (VSI) and the special separation bonus (SSB) to personnel with more than six years of active service before the date of enactment of this act, instead of December 5, 1991, as prescribed in current law.

The Senate amendment contained a similar provision (sec. 633) that would expand eligibility for both programs to servicemembers who complete the required period of active duty without regard to the date on which that period of active duty is completed.

The House recedes with a technical amendment.

Members eligible for involuntary separation benefits (sec. 503)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 503) that would modify the definition of "involuntary separation" to extend eligibility for the package of involuntary separation benefits in the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1991 (Public Law 101-510) to individuals on active duty or full-time National Guard duty as of September 30, 1991, rather than September 30, 1990, as provided in current law.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

Officers ineligible for consideration by early retirement boards (sec. 506)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 505) that would amend section 638 of title 10,

United States Code, to clarify officer eligibility criteria for selective early retirement boards.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

Remedy for ineffective counseling of officers discharged following selection by early discharge boards (sec. 507)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 506) that would require the secretaries of the military departments to establish procedures to review individual applications from officers selected for early discharge by board action to ensure that the officer were properly counseled that discharge was a potential result of being included in the population of those officers being considered by the board. If the secretary concerned determines that ineffective counseling occurred, the secretary would provide the member the option of participating in the voluntary separation incentive (VSI), special separation benefit (SSB), or early retirement program, if otherwise eligible.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment that would require the review mandated by this provision to be carried out by the Board for the Correction of Military Records of the military department concerned. Any such review must be completed within 60 days following receipt by the service secretary of an application for review.

Two-year extension of authority for temporary promotions of certain Navy lieutenants (sec. 508)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 504) that would extend to September 30, 1995, the current law which authorizes the "spot promotion" of certain Navy lieutenants who possess skills for which a critical shortage exists and who are serving in positions designated to be held by lieutenant commanders.

The House recedes with a technical amendment.

Original appointment as regular officers of certain reserve officers in health professions (sec. 510)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 502) that would exempt reserve officers in the health professions from the requirement in section 532 of title 10, United States Code, that an officer must be able to complete 20 years of active commissioned service by age 55 in order to be appointed as a regular officer. This provision would be consistent with an existing, similar exemption for physicians and dentists.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment that would authorize the Secretary of Defense to prescribe in regulations those medical skills in which reserve officers can be appointed as regular officers without regard to their being able to complete 20 years of active commissioned service by age 55.

Exception for health care providers to requirement for 12 weeks of basic training before assignment outside United States (sec. 511)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 514) that would authorize the exemption of certain reserve personnel with specialized skills and training, such as health care professionals, from the requirement for 12 weeks of basic training before assignment outside the United States in a time of war or national emergency.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment that would authorize the Secretary of Defense and, when appropriate, the Secretary of Transportation, to prescribe regulations that would allow certain members in the medical professions of the armed forces to complete a period of basic training shorter than 12 weeks before assignment outside the United States.

Number of full-time reserve personnel who may be assigned to ROTC duty (sec. 512)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 512) that would increase the number of active National Guard and Reserve (AGR) personnel who may be assigned to duty with a unit of the Reserve Officer Training Corps (ROTC) to not more than 275 at any time.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

Repeal of mandated reduction in Army Reserve component full-time Manning end strength (sec. 513)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 513) that would, in light of the new active component advisor program, repeal the full-time support reductions required by the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1991 (Public Law 101-510) in fiscal years 1994-1998.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

Two-year extension of certain reserve officer management authorities (sec. 514)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 514) that would extend to September 30, 1995, the current authorizations for certain reserve officer management programs.

The Senate amendment contained a similar provision (sec. 512).

The House recedes with a technical amendment.

Active component support for reserve training (sec. 515)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 515) that would direct the Secretary of the Army to establish one or more active cadre divisions during fiscal year 1995 to function as reserve component training divisions. These divisions would be a part of the active Army force structure, under an active duty commander, but could include Army National Guard and Army Reserve personnel as well.

The House bill would further require the Secretary of the Army to submit an implementation plan during fiscal year 1994, including the Secretary's recommendations for any statutory changes that the Secretary considers necessary to fulfill this requirement.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment that would modify the name of the training units and clarify the intent of the conferees that the primary mission of these active component units would be to provide training support to reserve units.

Test program for reserve combat maneuver unit integration (sec. 516)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 516) that would direct the Secretary of the Army to prepare a plan for a test program to determine the feasibility and advisability of applying the "roundout" and "roundup" models to active and reserve component unit integration at the battalion level.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

The conferees agree that the provision would provide the Secretary of the Army latitude to include a number of alternative organizational alignments in the test program. The conferees expect, however, that for the roundout portion of the test program, one of the alternatives would require that: 1) two of the three brigades of an Army division be restructured to include two active battalions and one National Guard battalion; 2) the third brigade of the division be restructured with a mix of active and National Guard companies in each battalion; and 3) National Guard personnel be integrated into the brigade and division headquarters and other division elements.

For the roundup portion of the test program, the conferees expect that one of the alternatives would require that each of the brigades of an active Army division be augmented with an additional (fourth) National Guard armor or infantry battalion.

Revisions to the pilot program for active component support of the reserves (sec. 517)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 517) that would clarify that the active component advisers assigned under section 414 of the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Years 1992 and 1993 (Public Law 102-190) may be commissioned or warrant officers, or enlisted personnel. The provision would direct the Secretary of the Army to include, in the previously directed report containing the Secretary's evaluation of the program, a proposal for any statutory changes the Secretary considers necessary to implement the program on a permanent basis. The provision would also require the Secretary of the Army to include in the annual Army posture statement a report comparing the promotion rates of officers serving as active component advisers with the promotion rates of all Army officers in the same pay grade and competitive category.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

Educational assistance for graduate programs for members of the Selected Reserve (sec. 518)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 521) that would permit Selected Reserve participants in the Montgomery G.I. Bill to pursue graduate-level course work, subject to the availability of appropriations.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

Frequency of physical examinations for members of the Ready Reserve (sec. 519)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 516) that would amend section 1004(a)(1) of title 10, United States Code, by changing the requirement that each member of the Ready Reserve who is not on active duty be given a medical examination from every four years to every five years. There is no statutory requirement for periodic medical examination for members of the active components, and this provision would conform the reserve statute with standard practice for members serving on active duty.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes. The conferees emphasize that this provision should not be misconstrued in any way to alter the provision contained in section 1117 of the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1993 (Public Law 102-484), which requires that: 1) each member of the Army National Guard undergo a medical and dental screening on an annual basis; and 2) each member of the Army National Guard over the age of 40 undergo a full physical examination not less than every two years.

Revision of certain deadlines under Army Guard combat reform initiative (sec. 520)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 518) that would modify title XI of the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1993 (Public Law 102-484) which prescribed a comprehensive package of initiatives to improve the combat readiness of the Army National Guard.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

Annual report on implementation of Army National Guard reform initiative (sec. 521)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 519) that would require the Secretary of the Army to include the Army posture statement each year a report on Army compliance with the provisions of the Army National Guard combat reform initiative (title XI of the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1993 (Public Law 102-484)), and related legislative provisions enacted as a consequence of lessons learned in the Persian Gulf war.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

FFRDC study of state and federal missions of the National Guard (sec. 522)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 520) that would require a federally funded research and development center to study the state and federal missions of the National Guard and the manpower, weapons, equipment, and facilities requirements that derive from those missions.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with a technical amendment.

Consistency of treatment of National Guard technicians and other members of the National Guard (sec. 523)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 513) that would amend section 709 of title 32, United States Code, by providing that the qualifications prescribed for federal recognition of an enlisted member of the National Guard may not differ between members solely on the basis of employment as a National Guard technician. In addition, the provision would repeal military education provisions included in Public Laws 100-456 and 101-189.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment that would require the Secretary of the Army to recognize credit on a technician's military record for completion of certain education and training courses granted under previous law for a period determined by the Secretary. Such a period may not terminate before such technician's next military promotion.

National Guard management initiatives (sec. 524)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 515) that would amend titles 10 and 32, United States Code, to eliminate unnecessary restrictions on personnel procedures, and to provide greater flexibility in the training, management, and mobilization of the National Guard.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment that would strike the portion of the Senate provision regarding physical examinations for members of the National Guard called into federal service, and make technical corrections.

Military service academy provisions (secs. 531-536 and 603)

The House bill contained two provisions regarding management of the military service academies (secs. 603 and 951). Section 603 would limit the pay rate for non-prior service students at the military service academy preparatory schools to the same monthly rate as provided for cadets and midshipmen. Section 951 would prohibit the proposed transfer of the Naval Academy Preparatory School from its current location in Rhode Island to Annapolis in fiscal year 1994.

The Senate amendment contained three provisions (secs. 521, 522, and 523) regarding the management of the military service academies. Section 521 would clarify the procedures for nominating candidates for admission to the military service academies. Section 522 would conform section 702(a) of title 10, United States Code, regarding graduation leave, to eliminate reference to commissioning in the regular component as a precondition for granting graduation leave. Section 523 would authorize the military service academies greater flexibility in hiring civilian faculty and establish uniform procedures for the reporting of hazing. The Senate report (S. Rept. 103-112) directs the Assistant Secretary of Defense for Personnel and Readiness to implement a test program to determine the cost effectiveness of using private preparatory schools as an alternative to service-operated preparatory schools.

The conference agreement would: (1) adopt both House provisions; (2) adopt the three Senate provisions with an amendment on the civilian faculty hiring provision that would extend to the Air Force Academy and the U.S. Military Academy the same flexibility for hiring civilian faculty that exists for the Naval Academy, and require a report from the Department of Defense on the appropriate guidelines for reporting violations of regulations; and (3) adopt the Senate report directive as a legislative requirement with a provision that would exempt the students who graduate from the private preparatory schools and enter the military service academies from counting against the strength ceilings of the military service academies, and require that the test give priority to the goal of providing sufficient opportunities for minorities, women, and prior enlisted personnel. The conferees do not intend that the enrollment of the military academy preparatory schools be negatively affected during the period of the test.

The conferees note for the record a June 15, 1993, final report issued by The American Council of Education (ACE) on its Service Academy Preparatory School Project. The conferees expect the Department of Defense to examine the entire ACE report and its recommendations carefully, and to take appropriate corrective action.

Provisions affecting the assignment of women in the military (secs. 541-543)

The House bill contained three provisions (secs. 541, 542, and 543) concerning the assignment of women in the military services. These sections would: (1) repeal the remaining combat exclusion law that prohibits the permanent assignment of women to vessels engaged in combat missions (sec. 541); (2) require the Secretary of Defense to prescribe gender-neutral occupational performance standards (sec. 542); and (3) require the Secretary of Defense to submit a report to Congress 90 days prior to implementing any change to directives or regulations affecting the policy restricting the assignment of women to units or positions whose mission requires routine engagement in ground combat.

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 541) that would: (1) repeal the remaining combat exclusion law (like the House provision) but, at the same time, specifically authorize the Secretary of Defense to regulate the kinds of duties to which women in the military may be assigned and the military authority which they may exercise; and (2) require a two-step notification process in which the Secretary of Defense would be required to transmit to the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and House of Representatives proposed and final regulations implementing any policy with regard to the assignment of women in the military services.

The conferees: (1) adopt the House provision with regard to the repeal of the remaining combat exclusion law which currently prohibits the permanent assignment of women to vessels engaged in combat missions; (2) adopt, with a technical amendment, the House provision with regard to the requirement for the Secretary of Defense to prescribe gender-neutral occupational performance standards; and (3) adopt a compromise between the House and Senate provisions with regard to reporting and notification requirements.

The compromise adopted by the conferees would require the Secretary of Defense to: (1) notify the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and House of Representatives 90 days before any changes are made to policies on the assignment of women to ground combat roles; and (2) notify the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and House of Representatives 30 days prior to opening any type of combatant unit, class of combatant vessel, or type of combat platform not previously open to women.

Responsibilities of military law enforcement officials at scenes of domestic violence (sec. 551)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 551) that would require military law enforcement officials to apprehend or detain persons at the scene of apparent domestic violence upon reasonable belief that an offense was committed involving physical injury or use of a deadly weapon or dangerous instrument.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment that would require military law enforcement officials at the scene of domestic violence to take immediate action to reduce the potential for further violence and promptly report the matter, within 24 hours, to the appropriate commander and family advocacy representatives. The conference agreement also would require a multidisciplinary family advocacy committee to promptly review the family situation and make recommendations to the commander.

The conferees remain concerned about the impact of domestic violence on military personnel and their families, as well as unit morale, good order, and discipline. The conferees urge the Department of Defense to issue promptly the regulations required by the conference agreement. The Department's progress in implementing and sustaining the policies required by the conference agreement will be a matter of significant concern during oversight hearings that will be conducted by the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and the House of Representatives.

Improved procedures for notification of victims and witnesses of the status of prisoners in military correctional facilities (sec. 552)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 552) that would require the Secretary of Defense to improve the procedures for notifying victims and witnesses of the status of offenders confined in military correctional facilities. The provision would require the procedures to be consistent, to the maximum extent practicable, with those of the Federal Bureau of Prisons.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with a technical amendment.

Study of stalking by persons subject to the UCMJ (sec. 553)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 553) that would require the Department of Defense to study the issue of stalking by persons subject to the Uniform Code of Military Justice.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

Transitional compensation for dependents of members of the armed forces separated for dependent abuse (sec. 554)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 554) that would authorize the Secretary of a military department to provide transitional compensation to dependents of a member of the armed forces who is separated from active duty as a result of a court-martial or administrative proceeding for dependent abuse.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with a clarifying amendment.

Clarification of eligibility for benefits for dependent victims of abuse by members of the armed forces pending loss of retired pay (sec. 555)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 654) that would amend 10 U.S.C. 1408, which authorizes benefits for dependents who have been abused by servicemembers who are losing the right to retired pay. The Senate amendment would make it clear that the dependent victim's eligibility to receive such benefits would begin when the convening authority approves a sentence that would terminate the servicemember's eligibility to receive retired pay.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with a technical amendment.

Extension through fiscal year 1999 of certain force drawdown transition authorities relating to personnel management and benefits (sec. 561)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 532) that would extend through fiscal year 1998 certain temporary authorities which provide tools to the military services for managing personnel reductions, and which provide a safety net of benefits for separating military personnel during the defense drawdown.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment that would extend these transition authorities through 1999. The conferees believe that by providing the Department of Defense with these authorities for the foreseeable length of the drawdown, they will encourage DOD to develop and implement coherent, integrated, long-term drawdown plans that will minimize the uncertainties and personnel turbulence associated with such a drawdown. In section 404 of the conference report, the conferees direct the Secretary of Defense to submit a long-range plan for using the transition authorities to reduce the active-duty force levels to those assumed in the Bottom-Up Review.

The House recedes with a further amendment that would make permanent the rate of basic pay applicable to certain members with over 24 years of service.

Retention in active status of enlisted reserves with between 18 and 20 years of service (sec. 562)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 533(a)) that would provide a sanctuary for reserve enlisted members in an active status with greater than 18 but less than 20 years of service.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with a technical amendment.

Authority to order early reserve retirees to active duty (sec. 563)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 533(b)) that would amend section 688(a) of title 10, United States Code, to provide the authority to order early reserve retirees to active duty.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with a technical amendment.

Applicability to Coast Guard Reserve of certain reserve component transition initiatives (sec. 564)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 522) that would extend eligibility for transition initiatives to members of the Coast Guard Reserve for the force reduction transition period.

The Senate amendment contained a similar provision (sec. 634).

The House recedes with a technical amendment.

Policy concerning homosexuality in the armed forces (sec. 571)

During the 103rd Congress, the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and the House of Representatives each examined Department of Defense policies concerning homosexuality in the armed forces. The Department of Defense also reviewed its policies. On July 19, 1993, the President announced his approval of recommendations from the Secretary of Defense and the Joint Chiefs of Staff concerning the service of homosexuals in the armed forces. On July 27, 1993, the Senate Armed Services Committee approved legislation setting forth a statutory policy on homosexuality in the armed forces. An identical provision was approved by the House Armed Services Committee on July 30, 1993. This provision, which was set forth in the House bill (sec. 574) and the Senate amendment (sec. 546), is set forth in this section.

Change in timing of required drug and alcohol testing and evaluation of applicants for appointment as a cadet or midshipman and for ROTC graduates (sec. 572)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 571) that would defer, until the applicant has met the other requirements for admission or commissioning, but not otherwise modify, the required testing for drug and alcohol use for prospective entrants to the service academies and for members of the Senior Reserve Officers' Training Corps (ROTC) who are being examined as part of the pre-commissioning evaluation.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recesses.

Reimbursement requirements for advanced education assistance (sec. 573)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 572) that would amend section 2005 of title 10, United States Code, to require the secretaries of the military departments to establish procedures to advise members of advanced education debts and to conduct investigations to determine if advanced education debts should be collected. The section would also authorize the secretaries of the military departments to waive the requirement to collect advanced education debts.

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 544) that would authorize the secretary of a military department to amend an agreement entered into by a member who received advanced educational assistance and reduce, at any time, the period of active duty service the member agreed to serve in conjunction with the receipt of educational assistance when it is determined to be in the best interest of the United States. This provision would also provide that any computation of reimbursement to the United States would be based on the reduced active duty service obligation.

The Senate recesses with a technical amendment.

Recognition of powers of attorney (sec. 574)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 573) that would ensure the effectiveness of powers of attorney notarized by persons authorized to act as notaries public under 10 U.S.C. 1044a.
