¶121.143 COLLEGE OF WILLIAM AND MARY, 300TH ANNIVERSARY

On motion of Mr. SAWYER, by unanimous consent, the Committee on Education and Labor was discharged from further consideration of the following resolution (H. Res. 524):

Whereas, throughout their history, the people of the United States have recognized that an educated citizenry is important to a democracy, and to that end have supported universal education as well as the development of centers of advanced learning for the benefit of the general welfare;

Whereas, on February 8, 1693, a royal charter was granted by King William III and Queen Mary II of England to found and establish "a certain place of universal learning" in the "good arts and sciences" to be known forever as the College of William and Mary in Virginia;

Whereas, on December 4, 1779, after the United States gained its independence, Thomas Jefferson, then Governor of the Commonwealth of Virginia and a former student of the College of William and Mary, led an effort to reorganize the curriculum of the College of William and Mary which resulted in the creation of the first elective system of study in the United States, the establishment of an honor system that remains an integral part of the College of William and Mary today, and the creation of the first Chair of Law in the United States;

Whereas the students of the College of William and Mary, the second oldest institution of higher learning in the United States, have contributed to the general welfare for three centuries, so that it has accurately been said that the history of the College of William and Mary forms a significant part of the history of the United States;

Whereas among the distinguished alumni of the College of William and Mary are three Presidents of the United States, Thomas Jefferson, James Monroe, and John Tyler; Chief Justice John Marshall and three Associate Justices of the United States; more than thirty United States Senators; more than sixty Members of the House of Representatives; eight members of Presidential cabinets; twenty-seven Governors of ten States; and countless other public officials and leaders in business, industry, military service, science, and the arts;

Whereas the College of William and Mary and the town of Williamsburg have flourished together, fulfilling a prediction made in 1699 that "the College will help make the Town", and together constituting an historical treasure to be enjoyed and appreciated by the people of the United States and the world;

Whereas in the past twenty-five years the College of William and Mary has established itself as a modern university with distinctive graduate programs and as a leader in higher education, while never wavering from its commitment to undergraduate liberal arts education as a foundation of a free society; and

Whereas, as the College of William and Mary prepares to embark upon its fourth century, it continues to educate men and women to be productive citizens in both public and private pursuits and to adapt its course of studies to the growing needs of the community and the Nation: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That it is the sense of the House of Representatives to commend and congratulate the College of William and Mary in Virginia on the occasion of its three hundredth anniversary, to recognize the many contributions it has made to the well-being of the people of Virginia and the United States, and to express the hope of the people of the United States that the College of William and Mary will continue to grow and prosper in the centuries yet to come.
