let the American people know that they are being heard, and we’re working very hard on it. And I might say, that’s after we opened an E-mail channel, so we’ve got a lot of people coming in through E-mail. We’ve got extra phone lines on for people to call in, and we’re still getting this much mail.

So you are really going to help make democracy work today. And all over America, people will have their letters read and their letters answered more quickly because you’ve agreed to come here and help us open and staple the mail so it can all be processed more quickly.

I am personally very, very grateful to you for doing this. You’ve made a real contribution to helping the White House work for America better. I hope it’s also a great fun day for you. And I’m delighted to see all of you here.

Thank you very much. Have a good day. Thank you very much.

Remarks on Signing the Flag Day Proclamation
June 14, 1993

Good morning. Welcome to the Rose Garden, and thank you for joining us for this observance of Flag Day. As we begin, I want to introduce three children, to my left, to lead us in the Pledge of Allegiance: Christopher Williams, an 8-year-old from Ketcham Elementary School; Delilah Johnson, who is also 8, from Ketcham Elementary School; and Sean Mizzer, 10 years old, from Watkins Elementary School. They are now going to lead us in the pledge.

[At this point, the students recited the Pledge of Allegiance.]

Good job. Let’s give them a hand. I thought they did well. Thank you. [Applause]

Thank you. Please be seated. I want to acknowledge the presence of a few of our guests in the audience today, including Mr. James Kenney, the national commander of AMVETS; Mr. Louis Koerber, the president of National Flag Day Foundation; Mr. George Cahill, the president of the National Flag Foundation; and Mrs. Romaine Thomas, who is the principal of Ketcham Elementary School, where two of these children attend school. Thank you all.

On this day in 1777, the Continental Congress adopted the Stars and Stripes as the official flag of our Nation. Throughout our history, this flag has been a potent symbol of America and what it means to be an American. You can hear America’s reverence for the flag in our music from our national anthem, “The Star-Spangled Banner,” written by Francis Scott Key in 1814, to George M. Cohan’s “You’re a Grand Old Flag,” to John Philip Sousa’s magnificent march “The Stars and Stripes Forever,” performed best by his very own United States Marine Band.

We owe a great debt to the members of our armed services, who have defended this flag through two centuries now. The United States Army, coincidentally, also celebrates its birthday today. As we honor the Army’s 218 years of history, let us also remember the brave Americans who today are defending the United Nations relief operations in Somalia. Their efforts are a reminder to all of us that we are blessed with enormous freedoms in America.

Think of the pledge we have just made, words we have known since childhood, words that come easily to us, so we often recite them without even stopping to think about their true memory. A “republic” is a government of, by, and for the people. “One Nation”: From our myriad diversity, from all of our differences, we still have a deeper measure of unity. “Under God”: the reminder that self-government is a sacred trust. “Indivisible”: Through a tragic civil war we learned the wisdom of President Lincoln’s lesson that “a house divided against itself cannot stand.” It is not enough for our house to stand, however. We must remember that a house stands strongest when it stands together. “With liberty and justice for all” is a promise that we must strive to make real, not just in our words but in what we do.

These ideas have brought new Americans to our shores from the beginning of our existence. They make our flag a symbol of hope to people all around the world. To those of you here who

Remarks Announcing the Nomination of Ruth Bader Ginsburg To Be a Supreme Court Associate Justice
June 14, 1993

The President. Please be seated. I wish you all a good afternoon, and I thank the Members of the Congress and other interested Americans who are here.

In just a few days when the Supreme Court concludes its term, Justice Byron White will begin a new chapter in his long and productive life. He has served the Court as he has lived, with distinction, intelligence, and honor. And he retires from public service with the deep gratitude of all the American people.

Article II, section 2 of the United States Constitution empowers the President to select a nominee to fill a vacancy on the Supreme Court of the United States. This responsibility is one of the most significant duties assigned to the President by the Constitution. A Supreme Court Justice has life tenure, unlike the President, and along with his or her colleagues decides the most significant questions of our time and shapes the continuing contours of our liberty.

I care a lot about this responsibility, not only because I am a lawyer but because I used to teach constitutional law and I served my State as attorney general. I know well how the Supreme Court affects the lives of all Americans personally and deeply. I know clearly that a Supreme Court Justice should have the heart and spirit, the talent and discipline, the knowledge, common sense, and wisdom to translate the hopes of the American people, as presented in the cases before it, into an enduring body of constitutional law, constitutional law that will preserve our most cherished values that are enshrined in that Constitution and, at the same time, enable the American people to move forward.

That is what I promised the American people in a Justice when I ran for President, and I believe it is a promise that I am delivering on today. After careful reflection, I am proud to nominate for Associate Justice of the Supreme Court Judge Ruth Bader Ginsburg of the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Co-

I’d also like any newly naturalized Americans to stand up. Do we have any new citizens here? Let’s give them a hand. Look at them. [Applause] Thank you.

Last night when we had the press party here at the White House, perhaps the most moving encounter I had was a couple came through the line; both of them were born in South America. But they had their little child with them who had just been born in the United States, and the child’s T-shirt said “Future President” on it. [Laughter] There you are. Look, there he is right there. Give him a hand, the father of the child. [Applause]

This is a special day. The children remind us of it, and so do our new citizens. Thank you all for coming.
