

having him had me as a part of my life.” That’s what leadership is all about. That’s what it means to be somebody who can set an example and somebody who understands the responsibilities of the assignment. It’s not just to win championships; it’s to shape lives in a positive way.

And I loved what Coach McGraw said. She said, “Usually there are negative things that occur during the season. But this year I’ve had not to call a single team meeting; I’ve gotten no complaints from professors. We can’t even yell at the players, because they do everything we ask.” I need your help with Congress. [Laughter]

Championships bring an awesome responsibility. Not only do you win a trophy, I think you have the obligation of understanding that you have enormous influence on people’s lives, people you don’t even know. People look at the champs and say, “How does a champ behave? What is a champ supposed to do?” Champions not only cut down nets, but they can influence people’s lives by sending positive signals by how they behave, not only on the court but off the court. It’s a big responsibility. It’s a huge responsibility. And that’s why these two teams are so fortunate to have great teamwork and great players.

I know this was a team effort, and I’m sure the two players I’m going to mention, Battier and Riley, are going to be somewhat concerned that the President has singled them out. But I want to remind people who may not know their histories that not only were they great players, they’re great people. Not only did they set goals about being the best on the basketball court, they set goals of becoming all-academic stars, and they were. They set goals of understanding the Golden Rule and living by it. These are good people. And I’m sure your teammates are, as well. But they set the kind of example that America needs.

And all of us who have got positions of responsibility—all of us, whether we’re a President or a coach or a player or a president of a university—must understand that with that responsibility comes the necessity to set the right signal all throughout America that there’s a difference between right and wrong, that we can be compassionate, and that we can love a neighbor like we’d like to be loved ourselves.

So it’s my huge honor to welcome good teams and good people to the White House.

NOTE: The President spoke at 10:20 a.m. on the South Lawn at the White House. In his remarks, he referred to Mike Krzyzewski, head men’s basketball coach, and player Shane Battier, Duke University; and Muffet McGraw, head women’s basketball coach, and player Ruth Riley, University of Notre Dame.

Remarks on the Observance of National Park Week and National Volunteer Week and an Exchange With Reporters

April 23, 2001

The President. It’s my honor for me to welcome and to be in the presence of one of my finest ambassadors. The White House, I often say, doesn’t belong to Laura and me; it belongs to the American people. And William Toth is a volunteer who works hard every day to ensure that every American feels right at home in the White House.

Mr. Toth has lived a life of service. In World War II, he served with distinction in General George Patton’s army. He later became a professor at New York University. He worked hard to put his own daughters through college, and when the youngest graduated, he retired. But he refused to rest.

For the last 9 years, Mr. Toth has been bringing smiles to visitors' faces as they arrive at the White House. Whether handing out gold coins to visiting children or passing out stories to adults, William makes sure that everyone leaves the White House with a memory.

America owes a great debt to William Toth. But like millions of volunteers across America, he will never ask us to repay it. And that's what makes his service, and the service of so many other volunteers, so unique.

The National Park Service has some of the best volunteers in the Nation. Whether it's here at the White House, at other sites around the Nation's Capital, or at the national parks around the country, National Park Service volunteers perform their duties with the simple goal of helping Americans enjoy our national treasures. They keep us connected to our history and help preserve America's natural beauty for future generations to enjoy.

That's why it's particularly fitting this week that we recognize both America's volunteers and America's national parks, for they both bring great joy to countless Americans.

At 77, William Toth continues to win over everyone he sees. In a letter she sent me last month, his daughter Dawn wrote, "I just want to let you know who you have in your corner. In some ways, he's America's most important diplomat. And he'll make you look darn good." I know that can sometimes be a difficult task, and I appreciate all the help I can get, William. [Laughter]

The truth is, Mr. Toth, you make America look darn good. I want to thank you for your tireless dedication, for working here at the White House. I want to thank the volunteers at the National Park Service, and the American people thank you from the bottom of their heart.

God bless.

Remarks on Presenting the National Teacher of the Year Award

April 23, 2001

The President. Thank you all very much. Welcome to the Rose Garden. I was wondering if it was ever going to get warm in Washington. [Laughter] It does.

Mr. Secretary, thank you, and thanks for your kind introduction and thanks for your service to the children of our country. I don't know if you know this or not, but just last week in Monticello, Mississippi, there was a school named in Rod's honor. It's the school he attended as a young man.

What makes the story interesting is that students of his generation were segregated by race. No more in this great land called America. The Rod Paige Middle School will know loud and clear that education breaks
