

tion of relations with the Government of Haiti, until the election of a civilian government pursuant to free, fair and open elections held in accordance with the provisions set forth in section 1; and

(2) the appropriate executive branch officials should consult fully and completely with the Congress before assistance of any kind is made available by the United States to the Government of Haiti.

SEC. 3. The Congress further declares its support for the people of Haiti and their desire for democratic government and economic development by directing that the appropriate committees of the Congress conduct hearings to determine what legislative actions may be appropriate and necessary to promote free, fair and open elections leading to civilian government in Haiti, including increased economic aid should the government take the steps outlined in section 1, or, in the event of its failure to do so, the feasibility of additional sanctions as outlined in legislation now pending before the Congress.

SEC. 4. The appropriate executive branch officials should examine ways that the United States can work with its friends and allies and appropriate international organizations and institutions to develop a multilateral policy toward Haiti that is consistent and sustainable.
