

13-4198-cv
Beaulieu v. State of Vermont

UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE SECOND CIRCUIT

August Term, 2014

(Argued: November 5, 2014 Decided: September 16, 2015)

Docket No. 13-4198-cv

-----X

ELIZABETH BEAULIEU, et al.,
Plaintiff-Appellants,

v.

STATE OF VERMONT, et al.,
Defendant-Appellees.

----- X

Before: LEVAL, LYNCH, DRONEY, Circuit Judges.

In an action against an agency and officials of the State of Vermont, alleging claims under the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938, 29 U.S.C. §§ 201 et seq. (“FLSA”), which Defendants removed from Vermont state court to the United States District Court for the District of Vermont (Sessions, J.), Plaintiffs appeal from the district court’s grant of Defendants’ motion to dismiss on the basis of Vermont’s sovereign immunity from private suit under the FLSA. We agree with the district court. While Defendants’ removal to federal court waived their Eleventh Amendment immunity from suit in federal court, it did not waive Vermont’s general sovereign immunity, and Vermont has not otherwise waived it. The judgment is AFFIRMED.

Thomas H. Somers and Adam P. Bergeron, Bergeron Paradis & Fitzpatrick, LLP, Burlington, Vermont, for Plaintiff-Appellants.

Jonathan T. Rose and Todd W. Daloz, Assistant Attorneys General for William H. Sorrell, Attorney General, State of Vermont, Montpelier, Vermont.

13-4198-cv
Beaulieu v. State of Vermont

1 Leval, Circuit Judge:

2
3 Plaintiffs, who are 704 current and former employees of the State of Vermont, appeal from 4 the dismissal of the action by the United States District Court for the District of Vermont 5 (Sessions, J.) by reason of Vermont’s sovereign immunity. The complaint alleges violations of the 6 Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938, 29 U.S.C. §§ 201 et seq. (“FLSA”), and seeks declaratory and 7 injunctive relief, damages, and liquidated damages for back pay. Defendants are the State of 8 Vermont, the State of Vermont Agency of Administration, and the Vermont Secretary of 9 Administration, sued in his official capacity (“Defendants”). Plaintiffs contend that, because their 10 weekly pay is reduced for partial-day absences in excess of their accrued leave, they are not paid
11 on a “salary basis” under the FLSA and are thus entitled to overtime pay at one and one-half times 12 their regular rate.

13 Plaintiffs brought this action in state court. Defendants removed it to the federal district 14 court. Defendants then filed an initial motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim under the FLSA.
15 The district court denied the motion. After further motion practice and discovery, Defendants filed 16 a second motion to dismiss, this time asserting state sovereign immunity from private FLSA suit.
17 Plaintiffs responded that Defendants had waived their immunity by express statutory waiver, by 18 removal, and by other litigation conduct, including assurances given to Plaintiffs that Vermont 19 would not present a sovereign immunity defense. The district court rejected each of these 20 arguments for waiver and granted Defendants’ motion to dismiss. We conclude that, while 21 Defendants may, by removing the action, have waived their Eleventh Amendment immunity from

13-4198-cv
Beaulieu v. State of Vermont

1 suit in a federal forum, Defendants have not expressly waived Vermont’s general sovereign 2 immunity from private FLSA suit, and their litigation conduct does not constitute such a waiver.

3 We affirm the judgment.

4 BACKGROUND

5 I. The FLSA Claim

6 Plaintiffs are current and former members of various non-management, supervisory, 7 judicial, and corrections bargaining units within the Vermont State Employees’ Association 8 (“VSEA”). Under their VSEA collective-bargaining agreements, Plaintiffs are guaranteed a 9 “Basic Weekly Salary,” based on a 40-hour work week at their relevant salary level, which is 10 computed as an hourly rate. It is undisputed that Vermont “has and continues to offer Plaintiffs a 11 minimum of forty (40) hours of work each week” and does not reduce employees’ pay for 12 absences occasioned by the State. Under the VSEA Agreements, Plaintiffs accrue personal leave 13 for time worked, in addition to sick leave. When employees miss work for their own reasons, 14 they must use either personal or sick leave in order to avoid deductions in their pay.

15 It is undisputed that as employees of a public agency, Plaintiffs are covered by the FLSA. It 16 is disputed whether they are paid on a “salary basis” and therefore “exempt” employees under the 17 FLSA. Exempt employees are not entitled to overtime. See 29 U.S.C. § 213(a)(1); 29 C.F.R. § 18 541.100. The Secretary of Labor has promulgated a “General Rule” and “Exceptions” for 19 determining whether an employee is paid on a salary basis and thus exempt from FLSA’s overtime 20 requirements. 29 C.F.R. § 541.602. Plaintiffs contend that, pursuant to this regulation, they are not 21 paid on a salary basis because: 1) the minimum salary they receive varies with the quantity of work

13-4198-cv
Beaulieu v. State of Vermont

1 they perform, as absences uncovered by personal or sick leave result in a loss of pay; 2) their pay is 2 calculated at an hourly rate; and 3) the State's practice of docking their pay in partial-day 3 increments for partial-day absences not covered by leave is impermissible with regard to salaried 4 employees. Defendants respond that: 1) the salary basis test allows for deductions in pay 5 stemming from absences occasioned by the employee, rather than the employer; 2) according to 6 regulation and judicial precedent, computation and recording of pay at an hourly rate do not 7 vitiate its salary nature; and 3) public employers may make partial-day deductions for employee 8 absences not covered by accrued leave without affecting the salaried, exempt status of employees 9 under 29 C.F.R. § 541.710.

10 II. Proceedings Below

11 Plaintiffs brought this action in Vermont Superior Court on January 7, 2010, seeking 12 relief under the FLSA. The complaint asserted that Vermont, by act of its legislature, Vt. Stat.
13 Ann. tit. 21, § 384(b)(7), had expressly waived its sovereign immunity to private suit under the 14 FLSA. Defendants removed the case to the federal district court on February 8, 2010, asserting 15 that court's jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. § 1331, because Plaintiffs' claim was based on federal 16 law. In their initial Motion to Dismiss, Defendants did not raise a sovereign immunity defense, 17 but argued instead that Plaintiffs had failed to state a claim under the FLSA. In their Opposition 18 to the Motion to Dismiss, Plaintiffs repeated the assertion that the Vermont legislature had 19 expressly waived sovereign immunity to private suits under the FLSA by statute. Defendants did 20 not address the issue in argument on the motion. After the district court denied Defendants' first

13-4198-cv
Beaulieu v. State of Vermont

1 Motion to Dismiss, Defendants filed an Answer, which did not assert a sovereign immunity 2 defense.

3 Over a year later, at a conference discussing prospective summary judgment motions, 4 Plaintiffs again raised the possibility of a sovereign immunity defense. Defendants responded 5 that they were not asserting the defense and that it had been waived. Plaintiffs then sent 6 Defendants a set of interrogatories, including “Does the State intend to rely upon the defense of 7 sovereign immunity?”, to which Defendants responded: “Defendants removed the claim to 8 federal court. Accordingly, Defendants do not intend to assert 11th Amendment immunity.
9 Defendants do not intend to assert they are otherwise immune from the FLSA in this action.”
10 J.A. 285.

11 Three months after filing this interrogatory response, and more than two years after the 12 beginning of the lawsuit, Defendants amended their response, announcing that they now intended 13 to present a sovereign immunity defense. Defendants specifically asserted immunity from private 14 FLSA suit in both state and federal court, and moved to amend their Answer to that effect. On 15 July 3, 2012, the District Court denied the motion to amend as to sovereign immunity and instead 16 directed the parties to file dispositive motions on the issue after further discovery. On October 17 24, the court allowed further depositions on the sovereign immunity issue, and on November 26, 18 2012, Defendants finally filed their motion to dismiss on sovereign immunity grounds. Shortly 19 thereafter, both parties moved for summary judgment on the merits of the FLSA claim, and 20 Plaintiffs moved also for partial summary judgment on the sovereign immunity defense. On 21 September 30, 2013, after hearing argument on the pending motions, the district court granted

13-4198-cv
Beaulieu v. State of Vermont

1 Defendants' motion to dismiss the suit on sovereign immunity grounds. Coniff v. Vermont, No.
2 2:10-CV-32, 2013 WL 5429428 (D. Vt. Sept. 30, 2013).

3 DISCUSSION<sup>1</sup>

4 The concept of state sovereign immunity encompasses different species of immunity. The 5 Eleventh Amendment, as interpreted by the Supreme Court, identifies a single species: immunity 6 of a state's treasury from claims for damages brought by private entities in federal courts. See 7 Seminole Tribe of Fla. v. Florida, 517 U.S. 44, 54 (1996). This immunity protects a state's 8 dignity and fiscal integrity from federal court judgments, Woods v. Rondout Valley Cent. Sch.
9 Dist. Bd. of Educ., 466 F.3d 232, 240 (2d Cir. 2006), and acts as a limitation on the federal 10 judiciary's Article III powers. See Alden v. Maine, 527 U.S. 706, 716-21 (1999); In re Charter
11 Oak Assocs., 361 F.3d 760, 765 (2d Cir. 2004) ("The Eleventh Amendment effectively places suits 12 by private parties against states outside the ambit of Article III of the Constitution."). States also 13 enjoy a broader sovereign immunity, which applies against all private suits, whether in state or 14 federal court. See Alden, 527 U.S. at 713, 722 (noting that states' "immunity from suit is a 15 fundamental aspect of the sovereignty which the States enjoyed before the ratification of the 16 Constitution" and that "the sovereign immunity of the States neither derives from, nor is limited

---

<sup>1</sup> \ Defendants removed this case to the district court pursuant to 28 U.S.C. §§ 1331 and 1441, on the basis of Plaintiffs' FLSA claim. The district court dismissed the case on sovereign immunity grounds and entered final judgment on September 30, 2013. Plaintiffs filed a timely Notice of Appeal on October 29, 2013. This Court has jurisdiction pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1291. On appeal from a dismissal for lack of subject matter jurisdiction due to a defendant's sovereign immunity, this Court reviews factual findings for clear error and legal conclusions de novo. Close v. New York, 125 F.3d 31, 35 (2d Cir. 1997).

13-4198-cv

Beaulieu v. State of Vermont

1 by, the terms of the Eleventh Amendment,” since in enacting the Eleventh Amendment 2 “Congress acted not to change but to restore the original constitutional design”). “The Eleventh 3 Amendment . . . is but one particular exemplification of that immunity.” See Fed. Mar. Comm’n 4 v. S.C. State Ports Auth., 535 U.S. 743, 753 (2002). Accordingly, there are two types of 5 “sovereign immunity” at issue here: (1) a particular species of sovereign immunity – Eleventh 6 Amendment immunity from suit in federal court – and (2) the states’ broader general sovereign 7 immunity against all suits.

8         Neither type of immunity is absolute. States may elect to waive either type of immunity 9 either in federal or state court. Coll. Sav. Bank v. Fla. Postsecondary Educ. Expense Bd., 527 10 U.S. 666, 675-76 (1999); Lapides v. Bd. of Regents, 535 U.S. 613, 618-20 (2002); Jacobs v. State
11 Teachers’ Ret. Sys. of Vt., 816 A.2d 517, 521 (Vt. 2002). Under limited circumstances, Congress 12 may override state sovereign immunity by exercising its Fourteenth Amendment enforcement 13 powers. Fitzpatrick v. Bitzer, 427 U.S. 445, 456 (1976). However, Congress’s mere creation of a 14 private right of action does not prevent a state from asserting its immunity to suit seeking 15 enforcement of such a statute that ostensibly imposes obligations on states. See Emps. of Dep’t of 16 Pub. Health & Welfare, Mo. v. Dep’t of Pub. Health & Welfare, Mo., 411 U.S. 279, 283-285 17 (1973) (recognizing that the FLSA was binding upon Missouri but nevertheless upholding the 18 State’s immunity to private suit to recover under that Act); see also Alden, 527 U.S. at 732 19 (“When a State asserts its immunity to suit, the question is not the primacy of federal law but the 20 implementation of the law in a manner consistent with the constitutional sovereignty of the 21 States.”).

13-4198-cv
Beaulieu v. State of Vermont

1 . . . .

2 (7) State employees who are covered by the Federal Fair Labor Standards 3 Act.

4
5 Vt. Stat. Ann. tit. 21, § 384(b)(7). Plaintiffs contend that “the plain, ordinary meaning of the term 6 ‘covered by’ [in clause (7)] is that state employees are afforded the protections and remedies 7 under the FLSA.” Plaintiffs’ Br. at 15.

8 Plaintiff’s argument misunderstands the difference between the applicability of a federal 9 statute to a state enacting lawful obligations upon the state, and the state’s amenability to a 10 private entity’s suit to enforce such an obligation. There is no doubt that the FLSA applies to 11 Vermont and creates a legal obligation on Vermont to pay its employees in accordance with the 12 statute’s terms. Nonetheless, Vermont’s sovereign immunity – unless waived or forfeited – bars 13 suit by a private entity seeking to enforce the FLSA’s terms. See Emps. of Dep’t of Pub. Health & 14 Welfare, Mo., 411 U.S. at 283-86 (recognizing that the FLSA was binding upon Missouri but 15 nevertheless upholding the State’s immunity to private suit to recover under that Act).

16 Vermont’s statutory reference to the fact that some of its employees are covered by the 17 FLSA implicitly acknowledges its legal obligations under federal law, but says nothing about how 18 that obligation may be enforced against it. It does not constitute an implicit, much less an explicit 19 waiver of its sovereign immunity from private suit. The fact that Vermont state employees are 20 covered by the FLSA does not mean that those employees are entitled to sue Vermont under the 21 FLSA’s private right of action. To the contrary, Supreme Court precedent is unequivocal in 22 distinguishing between a state’s legal obligation to comply with a federal law and its immunity 23 from private actions brought pursuant to that law. Alden, 527 U.S. at 755-59 (refusing to find a

13-4198-cv

Beaulieu v. State of Vermont

1 waiver of sovereign immunity despite Maine’s policy of compliance with the FLSA); Emps. of 2 Dep’t of Pub. Health & Welfare, Mo., 411 U.S. at 283-285 (recognizing that the FLSA was 3 binding upon Missouri but nevertheless upholding the State’s immunity to private suit to recover
4 under that Act); cf. Williams v. Okla. Dep’t of Human Servs., 122 F. App’x 958, 959 (10th Cir.
5 2004) (holding that Oklahoma state law stating a policy of “comply[ing] fully with the 6 provisions of the Federal Fair Labor Standards Act” did not constitute waiver of sovereign 7 immunity). Mere state statutory recognition of Vermont’s legal obligation to comply with the 8 FLSA does not express an intent to waive immunity from suit.

9 Nor is there validity to the argument that, as Vermont is subject to the FLSA under the 10 Supremacy Clause of the Constitution regardless of whether it acknowledges its obligations, the 11 statutory acknowledgment should be construed as a waiver because it would serve no purpose 12 unless as a waiver of immunity. The statute has a different clear purpose, which is to provide that 13 Vermont’s own statutory overtime pay requirement does not apply to “State employees who are 14 covered by” the FLSA. Vt. Stat. Ann. tit. 21, § 384(b)(7). It clarifies that this latter category of 15 employees, whose overtime entitlements are provided by the FLSA, are not also entitled to 16 overtime under state law.

17 The language of § 384(b)(7) is easily distinguishable from the sort of express language 18 utilized by the Vermont legislature and recognized by Vermont courts as a waiver of sovereign 19 immunity, exposing the state to private suit. See, e.g., Vt. Stat. Ann. tit. 12, § 5601(a) (stating 20 that the State “shall be liable” for injuries caused by negligence of state employees); LaShay, 625 21 A.2d at 228 (“Sovereign immunity protects the state from suit unless immunity is expressly

13-4198-cv
Beaulieu v. State of Vermont

1 waived by statute. . . . The State of Vermont has waived its immunity to certain suits under 12
2 V.S.A. § 5601.”).

3 II. Waiver by Removal

4 Plaintiffs also argue that the Defendants waived Vermont’s sovereign immunity by 5 removing the suit to federal court. This argument misunderstands the difference between 6 Eleventh Amendment immunity and the broader state sovereign immunity at issue here. As 7 explained above, a state’s Eleventh Amendment immunity has a different purpose and is far 8 narrower than the state’s general sovereign immunity. Eleventh Amendment immunity relates to 9 the relationship between the states and the federal government. It deprives the federal courts of 10 power to award money damages enforceable against a state’s treasury. It has no bearing on 11 whether a plaintiff may sue the state for the same relief in the state’s own courts. Even when a 12 state may be sued in its own courts for a money judgment, the Eleventh Amendment protects it 13 from a liability imposed by a federal court. But it would be unfair to allow a state which is liable 14 in its own courts to remove a suit from its own courts to federal court and thereby escape all 15 liability on the ground that the federal court lacks power to impose liability on the state. For this 16 reason, the Supreme Court held in Lapides v. Board of Regents of the University System of 17 Georgia that by removing a case from state court to federal court, a state defendant waives the 18 right to rely on its Eleventh Amendment immunity from the federal court’s judgment. 535 U.S. at 19 619-620, 624.

20 On the other hand, neither logic nor precedent supports the proposition that a state waives 21 its general state sovereign immunity by removing an action from state court to federal court. A

13-4198-cv

Beaulieu v. State of Vermont

1 state's sovereign immunity from private suit is a common law doctrine historically recognized by 2 both state and federal courts, though most clearly explicated in federal judicial precedents. See 3 Alden, 527 U.S. at 715-716 (citing, inter alia, Nevada v. Hall, 440 U.S. 410 (1979) and Hans v.
4 Louisiana, 134 U.S. 1, 16 (1890)). A state defendant sued in state court, when entitled to remove 5 the suit to federal court, may well wish to do so in the belief that its entitlement to have the suit 6 dismissed by reason of the state's sovereign immunity, an entitlement largely elaborated by 7 federal courts, will be better protected by the federal courts than by courts of the state. See, e.g., 8 Stewart v. North Carolina, 393 F.3d 484, 490 (4th Cir. 2005) ("North Carolina merely sought to 9 have the sovereign immunity issue resolved by a federal court rather than a state court.").

10 Furthermore, a state agency sued on a federal law claim, which contends that the state's sovereign 11 immunity remains intact but wishes to have the federal law claim adjudicated in federal court in 12 the event of a finding that the state's immunity has been waived or abrogated, should not be 13 compelled to abandon its claim of immunity as the price of access to a federal court. See, e.g., 14 Bergemann v. R.I. Dep't of Env'tl. Mgmt., 665 F.3d 336, 342 (1st Cir. 2011) ("[Plaintiffs] argue 15 that a state waives sovereign immunity whenever it removes a case to a federal court. If that 16 proposition were to prevail, a state with a colorable immunity defense to a federal claim brought 17 against it in its own courts would face a Morton's Fork: remove the federal claim to federal court 18 and waive immunity or litigate the federal claim in state court regardless of its federal nature.
19 Either way, the state would be compelled to relinquish a right: either its right to assert immunity 20 from suit or its 'right to a federal forum.'" (quoting Martin v. Franklin Capital Corp., 546 U.S.
21 132, 140 (2005))). Accordingly neither logic nor fairness supports the proposition that a state

13-4198-cv

Beaulieu v. State of Vermont

1 defendant's removal of a suit to the federal court should be construed as a waiver of the state's 2 general immunity from suit. And precedent does not support treating a state's removal as such a 3 waiver.

4 Plaintiffs cite the Supreme Court's opinion in Lapides v. Board of Regents as authority 5 for the proposition that by removing a suit to federal court, a state defendant waives the state's 6 general sovereign immunity. This is a misreading of Lapides. It was undisputed in that case that 7 the state had already waived its general immunity to suit prior to the litigation. Lapides, 535 U.S.
8 at 617 (explaining that, with respect to the relevant claims, "the State has explicitly waived 9 immunity from state-court proceedings"). Accordingly, the Lapides defendant's removal to 10 federal court could not serve as a waiver of the state's general immunity, which had already been 11 waived. The Supreme Court ruled, for the very good reasons discussed above, that the state's 12 removal to federal court did constitute a waiver of its Eleventh Amendment immunity from suits 13 for damages in the federal courts. The court explained that allowing a state which had waived its 14 sovereign immunity to effectively recover immunity by removing the case to federal court and 15 then claiming Eleventh Amendment immunity would give the state an "unfair tactical 16 advantage[]." Id. at 621. The Court expressly declined to "address the scope of waiver by 17 removal [that might occur] in a situation where the State's underlying sovereign immunity from 18 suit has not [already] been waived or abrogated in state court." Id. at 617-18. Lapides therefore 19 furnishes no support whatsoever for Plaintiffs' contention that Vermont's removal waived its 20 general immunity from FLSA claims.

13-4198-cv

Beaulieu v. State of Vermont

1           Nor do plaintiffs get support from Ford Motor Co. v. Department of Treasury of Indiana, 2 323 U.S. 459 (1945), the case that Lapides overruled. Ford Motor Co. similarly focused on 3 whether removal waived Eleventh Amendment immunity. In that case, as in Lapides, the state 4 had previously waived its general sovereign immunity and the question was whether it could 5 effectively recover the previously waived immunity by removing the case to federal court and 6 claiming the protection of the Eleventh Amendment. See 323 U.S. at 465-67. Following a line of 7 reasoning that the court subsequently disavowed in Lapides, Ford ruled that, because the state's 8 law did not authorize the state attorney general to waive sovereign immunity, the attorney 9 general's removal to federal court likewise could not constitute a waiver of the state's Eleventh 10 Amendment immunity. See id. at 467-69. Lapides rejected Ford's ruling on this point, crafting the 11 doctrine of waiver of Eleventh Amendment immunity by removal precisely to prevent a state 12 exposed to suit in its own courts by its own laws from fabricating immunity through flight to a 13 federal forum. Lapides, 535 U.S. at 623 ("A rule of federal law that finds waiver through a state 14 attorney general's invocation of federal-court jurisdiction avoids inconsistency and unfairness.").
15 There is no suggestion in either opinion supporting Plaintiffs' claims here.

16           There has, however, been some confusion in the Circuit Courts as to the meaning of 17 Lapides, and its impact on cases in which a state that has not previously waived its general 18 immunity to a private action voluntarily removes the action to federal court, presumptively 19 waiving its Eleventh Amendment immunity. Our court has not ruled on the question. Six Circuits 20 that have expressly considered the question have concluded that a state defendant's voluntary 21 removal of a private suit to federal court does not by itself waive the state's general immunity

13-4198-cv

Beaulieu v. State of Vermont

1 from such a suit. See Stroud v. McIntosh, 722 F.3d 1294, 1302 (11th Cir. 2013) (“We do not 2 understand Lapides to require the state to forfeit an affirmative defense to liability simply because 3 it changes forums.”); Bergemann, 665 F.3d at 342 (“Rhode Island’s sovereign immunity defense is 4 equally as robust in both the state and federal court. Consequently, there is nothing unfair about 5 allowing the state to raise its immunity defense in the federal court after having removed the 6 action. Simply put, removal did not change the level of the playing field.”); Lombardo v. Pa. Dep’t
7 of Pub. Welfare, 540 F.3d 190, 198 (3d Cir. 2008) (“We hold that while voluntary removal waives 8 a State’s [Eleventh Amendment] immunity from suit in a federal forum, the removing State retains 9 all defenses it would have enjoyed had the matter been litigated in state court, including immunity 10 from liability.”); Meyers ex rel. Benzing v. Texas, 410 F.3d 236, 255 (5th Cir. 2005) (“[W]hen
11 Texas removed this case to federal court it voluntarily invoked the jurisdiction of the federal courts 12 and waived its [Eleventh Amendment] immunity from suit in federal court. Whether Texas has 13 retained a separate immunity from liability is an issue that must be decided according to that state’s 14 law.” (citation omitted)); Stewart, 393 F.3d at 490 (“North Carolina had not consented to suit in its 15 own courts for the relevant claims . . . . Therefore, by removing the case to federal court and then 16 invoking sovereign immunity, North Carolina did not seek to regain immunity that it had 17 abandoned previously. Instead, North Carolina merely sought to have the sovereign immunity 18 issue resolved by a federal court rather than a state court.” (citations omitted)); Watters v.
19 Washington Metro. Transit Auth., 295 F. 3d 36, 39, 42 n.13 (D.C. Cir. 2002) (holding that an entity 20 created by inter-state compact, which enjoyed immunity from suit to enforce attorney’s liens in the 21 compactors’ own courts, did not waive that immunity by removal to federal court).

13-4198-cv

Beaulieu v. State of Vermont

1           The foregoing cases, while emphasizing different points in justifying their arrival at a 2 common result, concur in the altogether reasonable proposition that, where a state defendant has 3 not waived its underlying state sovereign immunity, i.e., where it is arguably protected from 4 private suit in its own courts as well as in federal fora, the state may avail itself of removal to the 5 federal court without sacrificing this immunity, notwithstanding that by removing it gives up 6 entitlement to Eleventh Amendment immunity from suit in a federal forum.

7           Plaintiffs contend that their position is nonetheless supported by decisions of the Seventh, 8 Ninth, and Tenth Circuits, and ask us to follow them. See Bd. of Regents of the Univ. of Wis. Sys.
9 v. Phoenix Int'l Software, Inc., 653 F.3d 448 (7th Cir. 2011); Embury v. King, 361 F.3d 562 (9th 10 Cir. 2004); Estes v. Wyo. Dep't of Transp., 302 F.3d 1200 (10th Cir. 2002). Plaintiffs argue that 11 these cases hold that a state's voluntary participation in federal court litigation constitutes a 12 waiver of the state's general sovereign immunity. This is a misreading of the law of the relevant 13 circuits, all of which adhere to the generally accepted proposition that a state defendant's 14 removal of an action to federal court waives the state's objection, based on the Eleventh 15 Amendment, to the exercise of federal jurisdiction, but do not subscribe to the proposition 16 advocated by Plaintiffs that by such removal the defendants also waive the state's general 17 sovereign immunity.

18           In the Seventh Circuit case, Board of Regents of the University of Wisconsin System, 653
19 F.3d at 450-51, a Wisconsin state university instituted an action in federal district court alleging 20 that the defendant infringed its trademark; the defendant counterclaimed alleging that the state 21 university was the infringer. The state university asserted its Eleventh Amendment immunity to

13-4198-cv

Beaulieu v. State of Vermont

1 bar the counterclaims in the federal court. The Seventh Circuit characterized the question as 2 whether the defendant’s “counterclaims against Wisconsin [are] barred by the sovereign immunity 3 doctrine that the Supreme Court has found reflected in the Eleventh Amendment to the U.S.
4 Constitution?” Id. at 457 (emphasis added). In a lengthy, erudite opinion, Chief Judge Wood 5 answered the question in the negative, finding no determinative difference between a state 6 defendant’s removal of an action from state court to federal court, which under Lapides waives 7 Eleventh Amendment immunity, and Wisconsin’s voluntary institution of an action in federal 8 court. While the opinion at times speaks in abbreviated terms of what was waived as the state’s 9 “sovereign immunity,” it is unmistakably clear that the sovereign immunity in question was the 10 limited Eleventh Amendment immunity that applies only to the states’ amenability to suit in 11 federal court, and not to the state’s general sovereign immunity.<sup>2</sup> The court never addressed 12 whether, at the time of the federal court litigation, the state retained or had waived its sovereign 13 immunity to suit in its own state courts.

14 The Seventh Circuit made this point unmistakably clear two terms later in Hester v.
15 Indiana State Department of Health, 726 F.3d 942 (7th Cir. 2013), in which Judge Wood, writing 16 once again, characterized the question whether “a state waive[s] the immunity it would have in 17 state court by removing a suit to federal court” as “a question that we have not yet had occasion to

---

<sup>2</sup> In Part IV of the opinion the court undertook a broad discussion of whether its holding was “in tension with the Supreme Court’s sovereign immunity cases,” concluding that it was not. 653 F.3d at 471. In this part of the opinion, the court refers more broadly to cases involving the general sovereign immunity of states. Nonetheless, the finding of waiver in the case applies only to Eleventh Amendment immunity.

13-4198-cv
Beaulieu v. State of Vermont

1 answer.” Id. at 949. The Hester opinion goes on to explain that the earlier case “d[id] not answer 2 the question . . . because there we said nothing about whether the state would have been immune .
3 . . in state court.” Id. at 950. Accordingly, Seventh Circuit precedent offers no support to Plaintiffs’ 4 claim that removal from state to federal court by a state that otherwise retains its sovereign 5 immunity in its own courts constitutes a waiver of that immunity.

6 Plaintiffs similarly misread the Ninth Circuit’s decision in Embury, 361 F.3d 562. Embury 7 likewise dealt with the question whether the state defendant, by removing the litigation to federal 8 district court, had waived its Eleventh Amendment immunity from the adjudication of the federal 9 court. The Ninth Circuit answered the question in the affirmative, id. at 566 (“Removal waives 10 Eleventh Amendment immunity.”), but the court in no way suggested that a state defendant’s 11 removal waives its general sovereign immunity, nor did the court even consider the question.<sup>3</sup>

12 The Tenth Circuit ruling upon which plaintiffs rely, Estes v. Wyoming Department of 13 Transportation, 302 F.3d 1200 (10th Cir. 2002), is ambiguous as to whether it supports the 14 plaintiffs’ position, or whether it merely subscribes to the now well-established proposition that a 15 state defendant, by invoking federal jurisdiction through removal to the federal court, waives its 16 Eleventh Amendment immunity from federal jurisdiction. On the one hand, it is true that the 17 Estes court repeatedly referred broadly to the state’s “sovereign immunity” as having been

---

<sup>3</sup> While the court never addressed the question whether the state defendant retained or had waived its general state immunity, it appears that the immunity had already been waived: the district court, in denying the state defendant’s motion based on Eleventh Amendment immunity, observed that, if the case were remanded to state court by reason of Eleventh Amendment immunity, much of the “considerable briefing on both the State and federal claims” submitted by the parties to the federal court “would be repeated in state court.” Id. at 563.

13-4198-cv

Beaulieu v. State of Vermont

1 waived by removal, without specifying whether it meant the state’s general sovereign immunity, 2 or the state’s limited Eleventh Amendment sovereign immunity. On the other hand, the Estes 3 court found precedential support for what it characterized as “the unremarkable proposition that 4 a State waives its sovereign immunity by voluntarily invoking the jurisdiction of the federal 5 courts” in the Supreme Court’s assertion in Lapides, that “[i]t would seem anomalous or 6 inconsistent for a State both (1) to invoke federal jurisdiction . . . and (2) to claim Eleventh 7 Amendment immunity.” Estes, 302 F.3d at 1206 (quoting Coll. Sav. Bank, 527 U.S. at 681 n.3, 8 and Lapides, 535 U.S. at 619). The court’s reliance in justification of its finding of waiver on the 9 Supreme Court’s language from Lapides, which explained why the state defendant’s removal to 10 federal court justified the conclusion that it had waived its Eleventh Amendment immunity to 11 federal jurisdiction, rather suggests that the Tenth Circuit was speaking of this more limited 12 waiver, rather than of waiver of the state’s general sovereign immunity.

13         Nonetheless, even assuming that the ambiguous discussion by the Tenth Circuit in Estes
14 can be interpreted, on its face, as supporting our Plaintiffs’ position that a state defendant’s 15 removal to federal court constitutes a waiver of the state’s general sovereign immunity, the Tenth 16 Circuit has recently disavowed that reading of Estes. In Trant v. Oklahoma, 754 F.3d 1158 (10th 17 Cir. 2014), the Tenth Circuit cited with approval Circuit decisions discussed above that analyzed 18 state sovereign immunity as consisting of both immunity from suit in a federal forum, which is 19 waived by voluntary removal to federal court, and immunity from liability in both state and federal 20 fora, which is not so waived. Id. at 1172-73. Trant ruled that “a state may waive its immunity from 21 suit in a federal forum [under the Eleventh Amendment] while retaining its immunity from

13-4198-cv

Beaulieu v. State of Vermont

1 liability [pursuant to the state’s general sovereign immunity].” Id. at 1173. The Trant court further 2 explained that its view was not inconsistent with Estes. Id. (“In Estes, we concluded that 3 Wyoming’s removal of a federal law claim acted as an unequivocal waiver of immunity from suit 4 in federal court.” (emphasis added)). Thus, even if we read the Estes opinion as supportive of 5 Plaintiffs’ position, the Tenth Circuit revoked that support by its own interpretation of its Estes 6 holding in Trant.

7 In any event, it makes no difference what the Tenth Circuit meant in Estes. Even assuming 8 that the Estes court meant that removal to federal court by a state defendant which has preserved its 9 general sovereign immunity constitutes a waiver of that general sovereign immunity (as well as a 10 waiver of the state’s Eleventh Amendment immunity to federal jurisdiction), we would reject that 11 view and instead accept what we consider the more persuasive reasoning of the several circuits that 12 have concluded that, while a state defendant’s removal waives the state’s Eleventh Amendment 13 immunity, it does not waive the state’s general sovereign immunity. We reject Plaintiffs’ argument 14 because we find it contrary both to reason and to virtually unanimous circuit court authority.

15 We conclude that Vermont’s removal of this case to federal court, while barring 16 Defendants from objecting under the Eleventh Amendment to the federal court’s power to impose 17 judgment payable out of Vermont’s treasury, did not constitute a waiver of Vermont’s general 18 sovereign immunity to private actions under the FLSA, which applies in both state and federal 19 courts.

20 III. Waiver by Other Litigation Conduct

13-4198-cv

Beaulieu v. State of Vermont

1           Plaintiffs’ final argument is that Defendants’ express renunciation in the early phases of 2 this litigation of a defense invoking the state’s sovereign immunity prejudiced the Plaintiffs and 3 thus constituted a waiver, precluding Defendants from later changing their minds about asserting 4 sovereign immunity.

5           In response, Defendants argue that what constitutes a waiver of a state’s general immunity 6 is determined by the state’s law, see Alden, 527 U.S. at 757-58, and that Vermont’s courts have 7 recognized only express statutory waivers of state sovereign immunity. Jacobs, 816 A.2d at 521;
8 LaShay, 625 A.2d at 228. Defendants argue further, on the basis of cases discussing Eleventh 9 Amendment immunity, that a state is free to raise its immunity “at any time during the course of 10 the proceedings.” McGinty v. New York, 251 F.3d 84, 94 (2d Cir. 2001); see also Calderon v.
11 Ashmus, 523 U.S. 740, 745 n.2 (1998) (noting that the Eleventh Amendment is jurisdictional in 12 that it limits a federal court’s judicial power, and may be invoked at any stage of the proceedings); 13 Pennhurst State Sch. & Hosp. v. Halderman, 465 U.S. 89, 99 n.8 (1984) (noting that the Eleventh 14 Amendment “deprives federal courts of any jurisdiction to entertain . . . claims [against the State 15 by private parties], and thus may be raised at any point in a proceeding”); Richardson v. N.Y. State
16 Dep’t of Corr. Serv., 180 F.3d 426, 449 (2d Cir. 1999), abrogated on other grounds by 548 U.S. 53 17 (2006) (holding that an Eleventh Amendment immunity defense need not be raised in trial court to 18 be considered on the merits); Leonhard v. United States, 633 F.2d 599, 618 n.27 (2d Cir. 1980) 19 (holding that sovereign immunity need not be expressly raised in the district court or on appeal 20 since it is a jurisdictional defect and may be raised at any time).

13-4198-cv

Beaulieu v. State of Vermont

- 1           The judgment of the District Court dismissing the action by reason of the general sovereign
- 2 immunity of the state Defendants is hereby AFFIRMED.