AMENDED ORDER

Michael E. Hegarty, United States Magistrate Judge.

On August 8, 2017, I issued an order regarding the parties' request for in camera review of certain medical records reflecting meetings between the Plaintiff and a psychologist and between Plaintiff and his medical provider. ECF No. 100. I recognize now that by accepting the parties' stipulation that a "physician-patient privilege" applied, I analyzed the records utilizing an incorrect legal standard and must revise my conclusion as set forth below. Accordingly, I issue this Amended Opinion and Order nunc pro tunc to August 8, 2017, and WITHDRAW the original Order.

On July 26, 2017, this Court held a discovery conference at the parties' request. During the conference, Defendants objected to Plaintiff's redaction of certain medical records. The parties provided the Court with both redacted and unredacted copies of the challenged records for in camera review. To determine whether the records are properly redacted, the Court must consider both the Plaintiff's allegations and the applicable law.

Plaintiff's Allegations

The Court has set forth the Plaintiff's allegations in its May 9, 2017 order on the Defendants' motion to dismiss as follows:

On November 18, 2014, the Plaintiff, Carl Leadholm, was driving home after working a full day at a recycling company. At some point during his drive home, Plaintiff suffered from a medical condition due to low levels of glucose in his blood, which caused him dizziness and blurred vision. This condition caused Plaintiff to swerve his vehicle and drive erratically. Defendants Dickey and Rouanzoin first encountered Plaintiff on the road, saw the vehicle swerving, and pulled him over to the side of the road. Rather than ask Plaintiff whether he was alright, Dickey and Rouanzoin immediately started to shout at him. Dickey and Rouanzoin did not attempt to secure any information from Plaintiff regarding his identity, nor explain why they pulled him over. The officers did not ask any questions about Plaintiff's medical condition. Rather, they opened the car door, pulled Plaintiff out, and slammed him onto the pavement.

Plaintiff, who had no previous interaction with law enforcement, curled into a fetal position on the pavement to protect himself. When Dickey and Rouanzoin pulled Plaintiff out of the vehicle, the truck was still in "drive" and it began to roll into oncoming traffic. Rouanzoin chased and entered the vehicle, stopped it, and shut the engine off.

While Plaintiff was still on the ground, Dickey and Rouanzoin jammed Plaintiff's face into the pavement. At that point, Defendant Diener sprayed Plaintiff in the face with pepper spray, then Dickey, Rouanzoin, Jenkins, Diener, and Lord (the "Individual Defendants") struck Plaintiff with batons in the legs. During this beating, Dickey accidentally struck Rouanzoin with his baton. Dickey also applied multiple taser strikes to Plaintiff. Further, the Individual Defendants wrenched Plaintiff's right hand behind his back causing pain and damage to his hand, fingers, and rotator cuff. These injuries necessitated two surgeries. Plaintiff will require additional surgeries every ten years to replace the joint in his finger.

Plaintiff did not resist the police officer's attempts to physically restrain him.

Eventually, an ambulance was called to provide emergency care for Plaintiff. When the paramedics gave him a chance to speak, Plaintiff indicated that he was diabetic and did not feel well. The paramedics tested Plaintiff's blood glucose level and found his readings to be at a level of 35.

According to information from the University of Michigan's Health System Department of Metabolism, Endocrinology and Diabetes pertaining to hypoglycemia—or low blood glucose—a blood glucose reading of 35 is defined as follows:

Severe hypoglycemia

The symptoms of severe low blood sugar develop when blood sugar falls below 35-40 mg/dL and may include:

- * Seizures or convulsions
- * Loss of consciousness, coma
- * Low body temperature (hypothermia)

The attending paramedics recognized the potential danger that existed for Plaintiff and promptly administered glycogen, which likely prevented him from slipping into a diabetic coma.

Based on these allegations, the Plaintiff has alleged constitutional claims pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1983 for excessive force against the individual Defendants and failure to train against the City, and seeks compensatory, consequential, and economic damages for his physical, emotional, and financial losses. Am. Compl., ECF No. 43 at 16.

Applicable Law

Rule 26(b)(5) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure governs the withholding and production of privileged materials in a federal lawsuit. As pertinent here, Rule 26(b)(5) states:

(A) Information Withheld. When a party withholds information otherwise discoverable by claiming that the information is privileged or subject to protection as trial-preparation material, the party must:

- (i) expressly make the claim; and
- (ii) describe the nature of the documents, communications, or tangible things not produced or disclosed – and do so in a manner that, without revealing information itself privileged or protected, will enable other parties to assess the claim.

(B) Information Produced. If information produced in discovery is subject to a claim of privilege or of protection as trial-preparation material, the party making the claim may notify any party that received the information of the claim and the basis for it. After being notified, a party must promptly return, sequester, or destroy the specified information and any copies it has; must not use or disclose the information until the claim is resolved; must take reasonable steps to retrieve the information if the party disclosed it before being notified; and may promptly present the information to the court under seal for a determination of the claim. The producing party must preserve the information until the claim is resolved.

Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(b)(5). In federal question cases such as this one, federal law controls the issues of privilege raised by the parties, and federal common law recognizes that “confidential communications between a licensed psychotherapist and her patients in the course of diagnosis or treatment are protected from compelled disclosure under Rule 501 of the Federal Rules of Evidence.” Jaffe v. Redmond, 518 U.S. 1, 15 (1996).

Here, Plaintiff asserts he has withheld a number of his medical records on the basis of the “physician-patient privilege.” Defendants do not dispute that the medical records (or information contained therein) are facially protected by a physician-patient privilege in this case. Rather, they argue that the information is or may be related to claims in the case.

The records submitted by Defendant primarily involve counseling sessions between Plaintiff and a mental health provider, but Defendant also submitted two records of office visits by the Plaintiff to his medical provider.

Again, federal privilege law governs the issues presented, as Plaintiff’s claims for relief arise under a federal statute, and the federal common law does not recognize a physician-patient privilege. See Whalen v. Roe, 429 U.S. 589, 602, n.28 (1977) (“physician-patient privilege is unknown to the common law”). But, as set forth above, it does recognize a psychologist-patient privilege. Jaffe, 518 U.S. at 15. This psychologist-patient “privilege is not absolute.” Fisher v. Sw. Bell Tele. Co., 361 F. App’x 974, 978 (10th Cir. Jan. 25, 2010) (quoting Doe v. Oberweis Dairy, 456 F.3d 704, 718 (7th Cir. 2006) and citing Jaffee, 518 U.S. at 15 n.14 (“Like other testimonial privileges, the patient may of course waive the protection.”). “Numerous courts since Jaffee have concluded that, similar to attorney-client privilege that can be waived when the client places the attorney’s representation at issue, a plaintiff waives the psychotherapist-patient privilege by placing his or her medical condition at issue.” Id. (quoting Schoffstall v. Henderson, 223 F.3d 818, 823 (8th Cir. 2000) (collecting cases)).

Analysis

With these legal standards in mind and after review of the allegations and challenged records, the Court finds the following with respect to each record, as identified by its Bates-label page number:

0000052 - should not be redacted

0000055 - the first redacted paragraph should not be redacted, but the second paragraph is properly redacted

0000056 - the first redacted line should be redacted, but the second line should not be redacted

0000073 - all redactions are proper

0000074 - all redactions are proper

0000181 - should not be redacted;

0000188 - should not be redacted; and

0000190 - should not be redacted.

The Plaintiff shall produce copies of records on which redactions should be removed to the Defendants on or before August 15, 2017.

Dated at Denver, Colorado, this 27th day of February, nunc pro tunc to August 8, 2017.
