

Adobe Acrobat or Reader 9.0 Validation Process

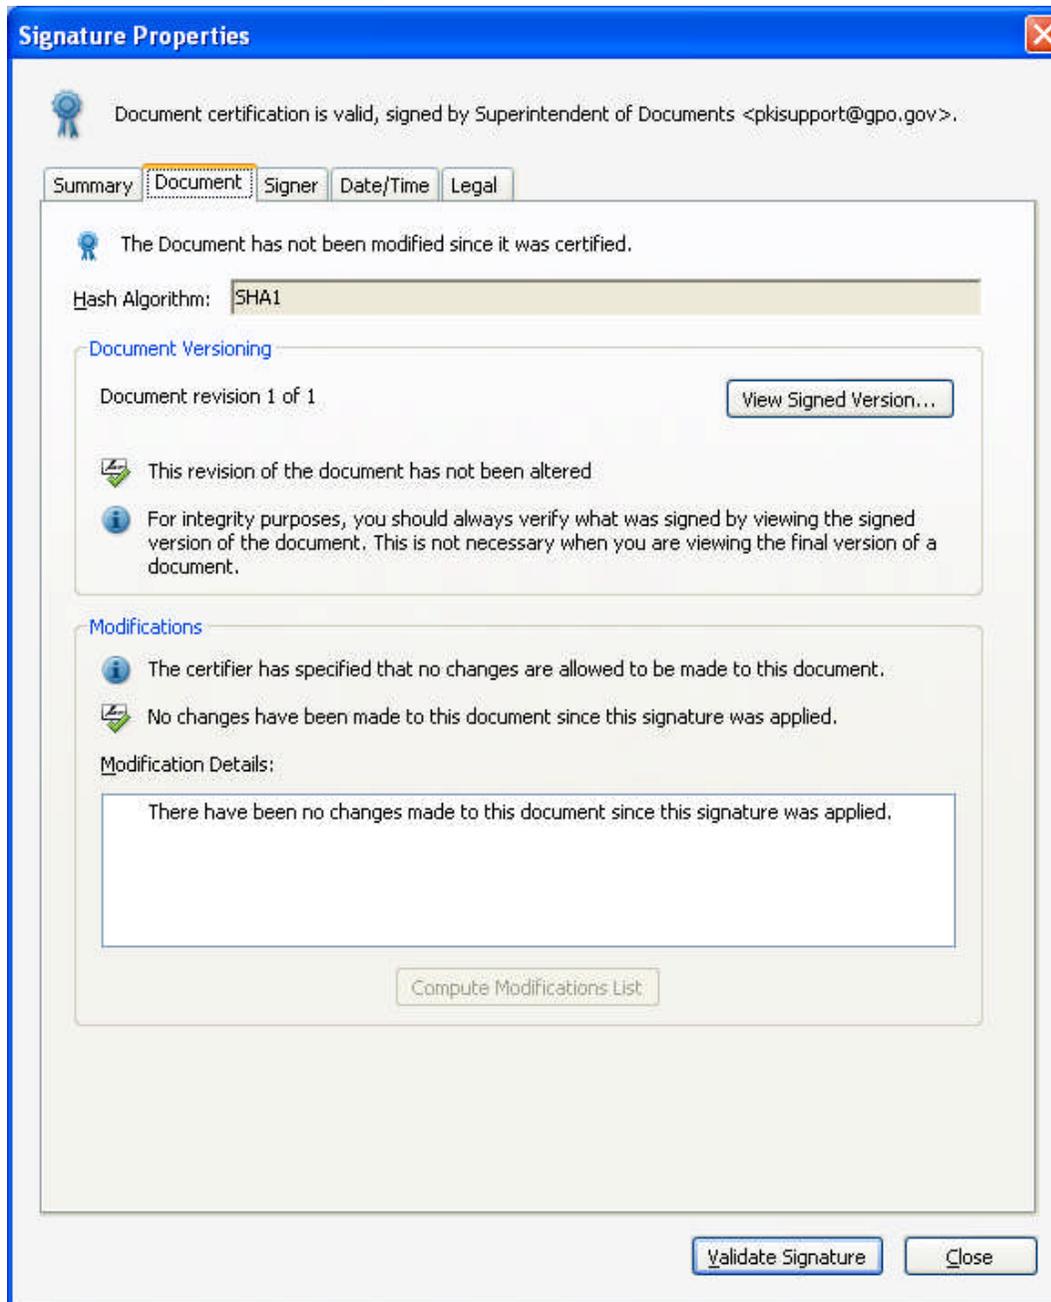

When you open a digitally signed file in Adobe Acrobat or Reader 9.0, you will see a light blue bar along the top of the page. The blue ribbon icon lets you know that the digital signature is valid and that the document has not been modified since GPO signed and certified it.

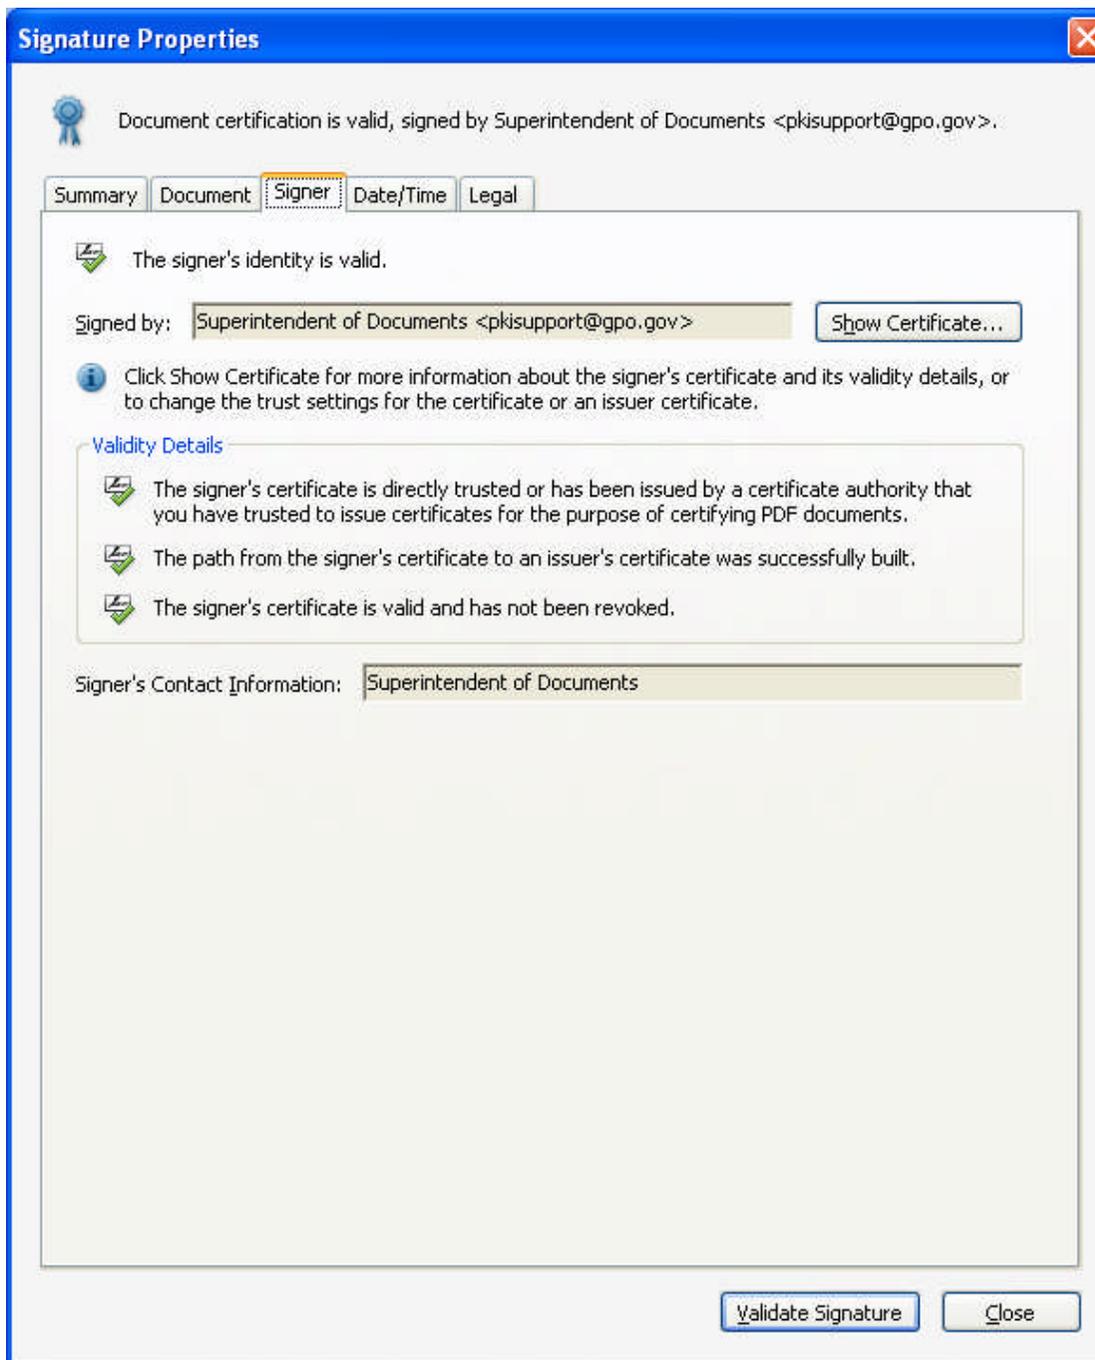

Right-click on the GPO Seal of Authenticity and select “Show Signature Properties...” from the menu that appears.

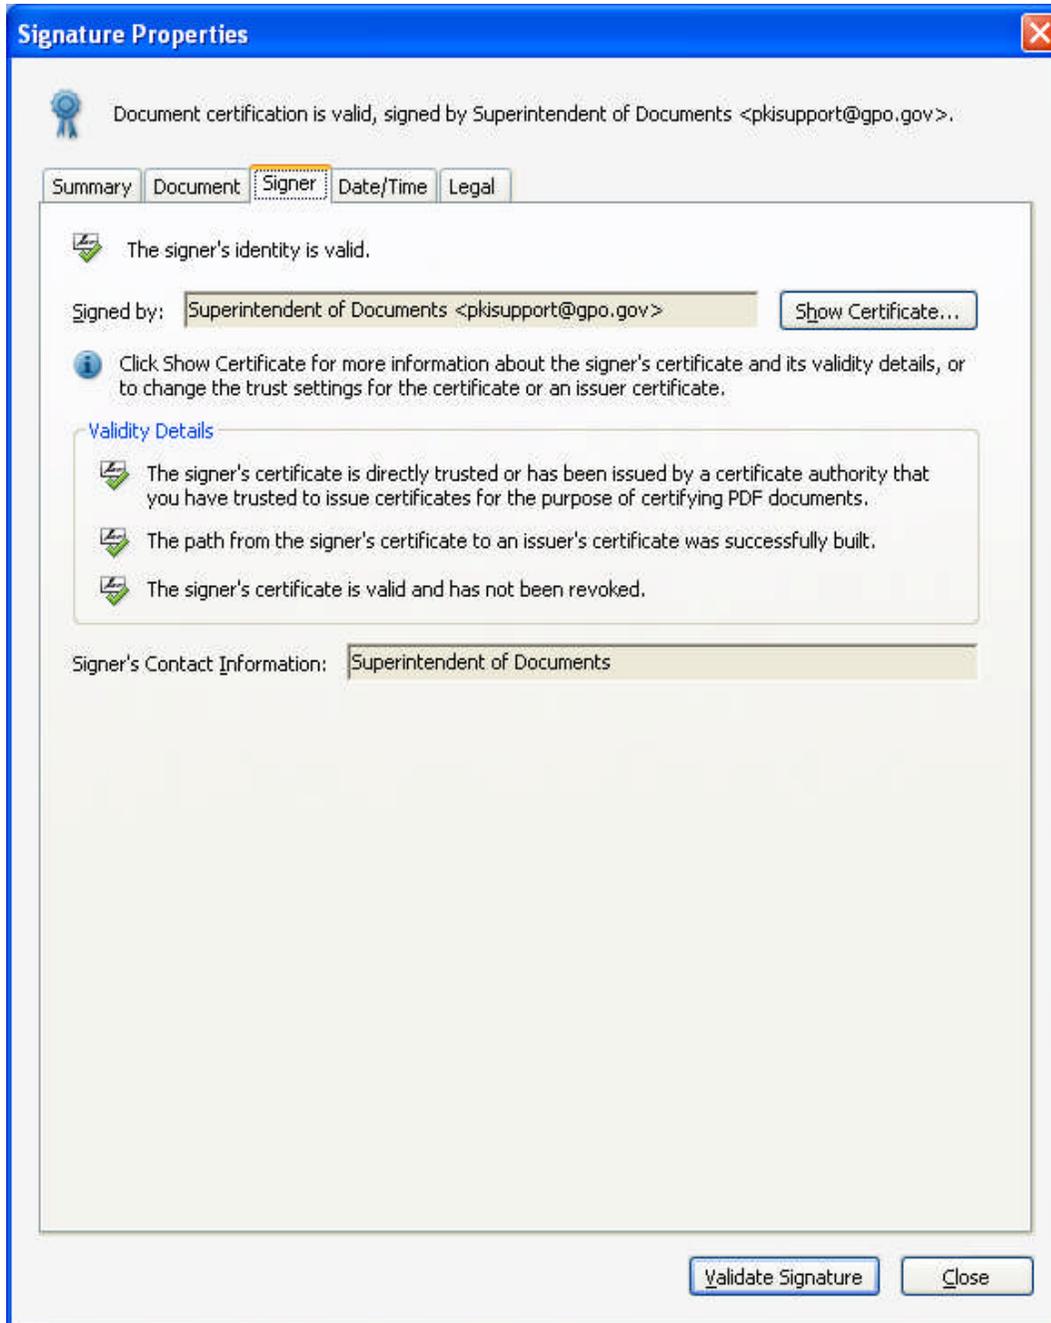

The Signature Properties dialog box provides information on the signature. It will open to the Summary tab, showing summary information about the signature. Click on "Document."

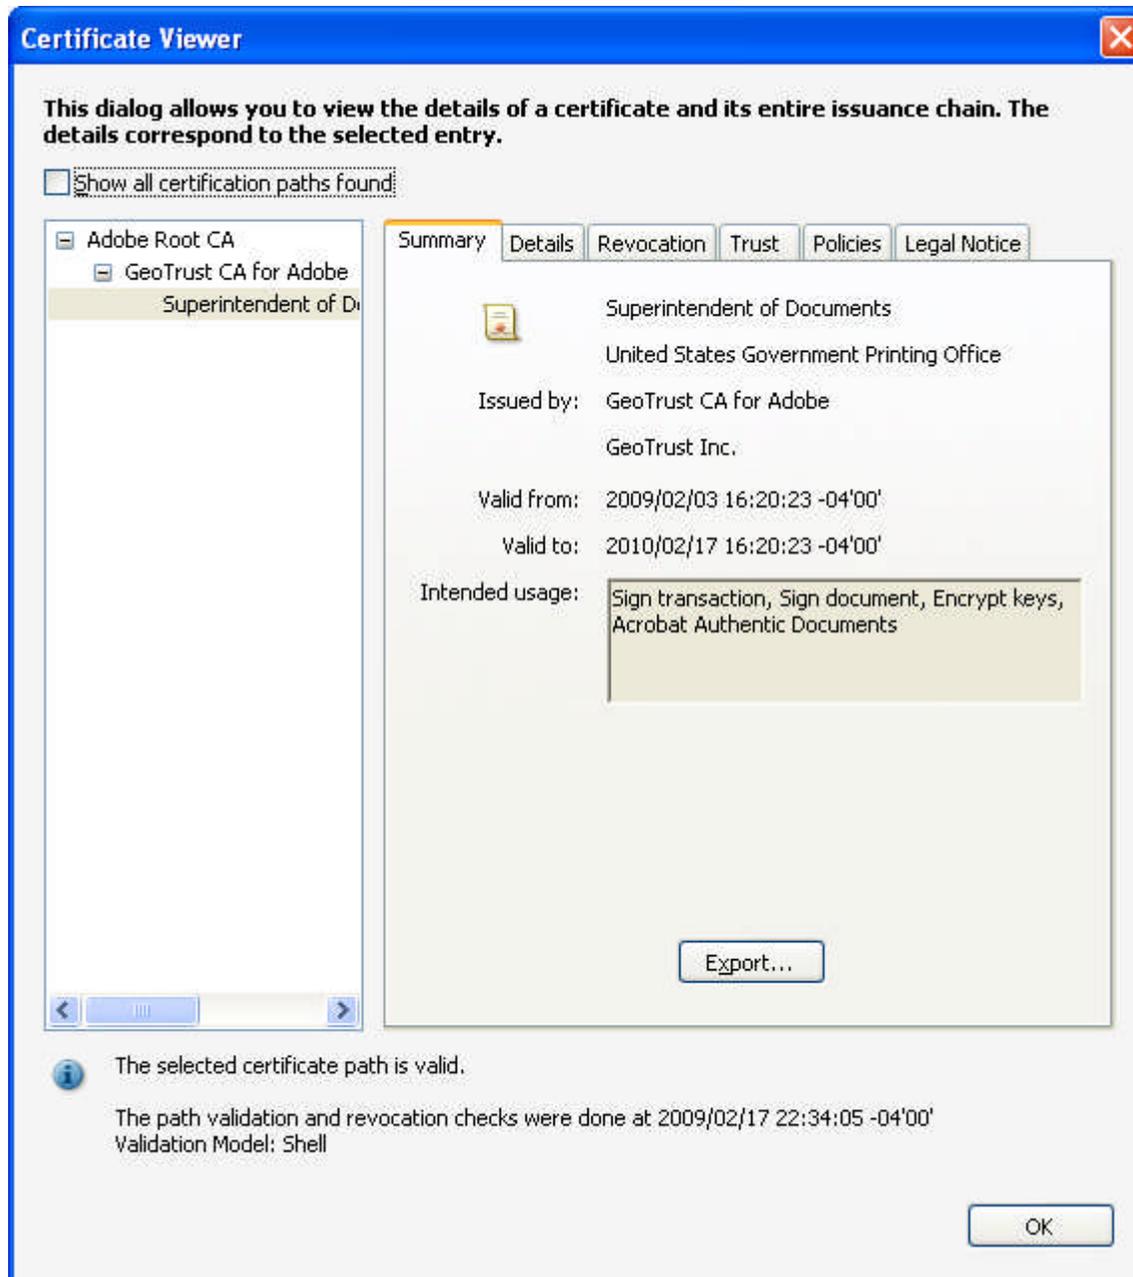

The Document tab provides information about the signed document. Click on "Signer."

The Signer tab provides information about identity of the individual or organization that signed the document. Click on "Show Certificate."

The Signer tab provides information about identity of the individual or organization that signed the document. Click on "Show Certificate."

The Certificate Viewer provides details on the certificate used to sign the document and the certificate path. Click on “OK” to close the Certificate Viewer. If the Signature Properties dialog box is still open, click “Close.”

In Adobe Acrobat or Reader 9.0, signatures are validated when the file is opened. If you would like to check the validity, click the GPO Seal of Authenticity.

Adobe will run a validation check and you should get this Signature Validation Status dialog box.

An alternate way to do this check is to right-click on the GPO Seal of Authenticity shown in the previous slide and select "Validate Signature" from the menu that appears. Adobe will run the validation check and you should get the box shown above.

Note that you can click "Signature Properties" in the Signature Validation Status dialog box to view the Signature Properties. This will show the same Signature Properties dialog box that is shown when you right-click on the GPO Seal of Authenticity as shown in earlier slides.
